Now Series, i

BEADLE'S

No. 387.

Mamour Sources

The Mad Horseman.

Popular Dime Hand-Books.

BEADLE AND ADAMS, PUBLISHERS, NEW YORK.

Each volume 100 12mo. pages, sent post-paid on receipt of price-ten cents each.

STANDARD SCHOOL SERIES.

1. Dime American Speaker.
2. Dime National Speaker.

Dime Patriotic Speaker.
 Dime Comic Speaker.
 Dime Elocutionist.

6. Dime Humorous Speaker.
7. Dime Standard Speaker.

8. Dime Stump Speaker.
9. Dime Juvenile Speaker.

10. Dime Spread-eagle Speaker.
11. Dime Debater and Chairman's Guide.

12. Dime Exhibition Speaker.
13. Dime School Speaker.

Dime Ludicrous Speaker.
 Carl Pretzel's Komikal Speaker.

16. Dime Youth's Speaker. 17. Dime Eloquent Speaker.

18. Dime Hail Columbia Speaker.

19. Dime Serio-Comic Speaker. 20. Dime Select Speaker.

Dime Melodist. (Music and Words.) School Melodist. (Music and Words.) Dime Dialogues Number One.

Dime Dialogues Number Two. Dime Dialogues Number Three.

Dime Dialogues Number Four. Dime Dialogues Number Five.

Dime Dialogues Number Five.
Dime Dialogues Number Six.

Dime Dialogues Number Seven. Dime Dialogues Number Eight.

Dime Dialogues Number Nine. Dime Dialogues Number Ten. Dime Dialogues Number Eleven.

Dime Dialogues Number Twelve. Dime Dialogues Number Thirteen. Dime Dialogues Number Fourteen.

Dime Dialogues Number Fifteen.
Dime Dialogues Number Sixteen.

Dime Dialogues Number Seventeen. Dime Dialogues Number Eighteen. Dime Dialogues Number Nineteen.

Dime Dialogues Number Twenty.
Dime Dialogues Number Twenty-one.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERIES.

1-DIME GENTS' LETTER-WRITER-Embracing Forms, Models, Suggestions and Rules for the use of all classes, on all occasions.

2-DIME BOOK OF ETIQUETTE-For Ladies and Gentlemen: being a Guide to True Gentility and Good-Breeding, and a Directory to the Usages of society.

3-DIME BOOK OF VERSES-Comprising Verses for Valentines, Mottoes, Couplets, St. Valentine Verses, Bridal and Marriage Verses, Verses of Love, etc.
4-DIME BOOK OF DREAMS-Their Roman ce and Mystery; with a complete interpreting Dictionary. Compiled from the most accredited sources.

5-DIME FORTUNE-TELLER-Comprising the art of Fortune-Telling, how to read Character, etc.

6-DIME LADIES' LETTER-WRITER-Giving the various forms of Letters of School Days, Love and Friendship, of Society, etc.

7-DIME LOVERS' CASKET-A Treatise and Guide to Friendship, Love, Courtship and Marriage. Embracing also a complete Floral Dictionary, etc.

8-DIME BALL-ROOM COMPANION-And Guide to Dancing. Giving rules of Etiquette, hints on Private Parties, toilettes for the Ball-room, etc.

9-BOOK OF 100 GAMES-Out-door and In-door SUMMER GAMES for Tourists and Families in the Country, Picnics, etc., comprising 100 Games, Forfeits, etc.

10-DIME CHESS INSTRUCTOR-A complete hand-book of instruction, giving the entertaining mysteries of this most interesting and fascinating of games.

11-DIME BOOK OF CROQUET-A complete guide to the game, with the latest rules, diagrams, Croquet Dictionary, Parlor Croquet, etc.

12-DIME BOOK OF BEAUTY-A delightful book, full of interesting information. It deserves a place in the hands of every one who would be beautiful.

DIME ROBINSON: CRUSOE-In large octavo, double columns, illustrated.

FAMILY SERIES.

1. DIME COOK BOOK.

2. DIME RECIPE BOOK. 3. DIME HOUSEWIFE'S MANUAL. 4. DIME FAMILY PHYSICIAN. 5. DIME DRESSMAKING AND MIL-LINERY.

The above books are sold by Newsdealers everywhere, or will be sent, postpaid, to any address, on receipt of price, 10 cents each. BEADLE & ADAMS, Publishers, 98 William Street, New York. Popular Dime Hand-Books.

BEADLE AND ADAMS, PUBLISHERS, NEW YORK.

Each volume 100 12mo. pages, sent post-paid on receipt of price-ten cents each.

STANDARD SCHOOL SERIES.

1. Dime American Speaker.
2. Dime National Speaker.
3. Dime Patriotic Speaker.
4. Dime Comic Speaker.

Dime Elocutionist.
 Dime Humorous Speaker.
 Dime Standard Speaker.

9. Dime Stump Speaker. 10. Dime Spread-eagle Speaker.

11. Dime Debater and Chairman's Guide.

12. Dime Exhibition Speaker.

13. Dime School Speaker.
14. Dime Ludicrous Speaker.

15. Carl Pretzel's Komikal Speaker.

16. Dime Youth's Speaker.
17. Dime Eloquent Speaker.

is. Dime Hail Columbia Speaker.

19. Dime Serio-Comic Speaker.

DIME DIALOGUES. Dime Dialogues Number One. Dime Dialogues Number Two. Dime Dialogues Number Three. Dime Dialogues Number Four. Dime Dialogues Number Five. Dime Dialogues Number Six. Dime Dialogues Nul. er Seven. Dime Dialogues No Per Eight.

Dime Dialogues

Dime Dialogue

Dime Dime Dialogue Number Twelve. Dime Dialogues Number Thirteen. Dime Dialogues Number Fourteen. Dime Dialogras Number Fifteen. Dime Dialogu Number Sixteen. Dime Dialogu Number Seventeen. Dime Dialogues Number Eighteen.

Dime Dialogues Number Nineteen.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERIES.

1-DIME GENTS' LETTER-WRITER-Embracing Forms, Models, Suggestions and Rules for the use of all classes, on all occasions.

2-DIME BOOK OF ETIQUETTE-For Ladies and Gentlemen; being a Guide to True Gentility and Good-Breeding, and a Directory to the Usages of society.

3-DIME BOOK OF VERSES-Comprising Verses for Valentines, Mottoes, Couplets, St. Valentine Verses, Bridal and Marriage Verses, Verses of Love, etc.

4-DIME BOOK OF DREAMS-Their Roman ce and Mystery; with a complete in-

5-DIME FORTUNE-TELLER-Comprising the art of Fortune-Telling, how to

6-DIME LADIES' LETTER-WRIT ER-Giving the various forms of Letters of School Days, Loye and Friendship, of Society, etc.

7-DIME LOVERS CASKET-A Treatise and Guide to Friendship, Love, Court-ship and Marriage. Embracing also a complete Floral Dictionary, etc.

8-DIME BALL-ROOM COMPANION-And Guide to Dancing. Giving rules of Efiquette, hints on Private Parties, toilettes for the Ball-room, etc.

9-BOOK OF 100 GAMES-Out-door and In-door SUMMER GAMES for Tourists and Families in the Country, Picnics, etc., comprising 100 Games, Forfeits, etc.

10-DIME CHESS INSTRUCTOR-A complete hand-book of instruction, giving the entertaining mysteries of this most tineresting and fascinating of games.

11-DIME BOOK OF CROQUET-A complete guide to the game, with the latest rules, diagrams, Croquet Dictionary, Parlor Croquet, etc.

12-DIME BOOK OF BEAUTY-A delightful book, full of interesting information. It deserves a place in the hands of every one who would be beautiful.

DIME ROBINSON CRUSOE-In large octavo, double columns, illustrated.

Hand-Books of Games.

DIME BASE-BALL PLAYER FOR 1877.

DIME BOOK OF CROQUET.

DIME GUIDE TO SWIMMING. DIME CRICKET AND FOOTBALL.

DIME BOOK OF PEDESTRIANISM.

DIME RIDING AND DRIVING.

DIME YACHTING AND ROWING.

Family Hand-Books.

1. DIME COOK BOOK. 2. DIME RECIPE BOOK.

3. DIME HOUSEKEEPER'S GUIDE.

4. DIME FAMILY PHYSICIAN.

5. DIME DRESSMAKING AND MIL-LINERY.

The above books are sold by Newsdealers everywhere, or will be sent, postpaid, to any address, on receipt of price, 10 cents each. BEADLE & ADAMS, Publishers, 98 William Street, New York.

Commence of the second second

OR,

THE PLAIRIE TOURNAMENT.

· 990

200-3-

A SEQUEL TO "DUSKY DARRELL."

BY EDWIN EMERSON.

AUTHOR OF THE FOLLOWING DIME NOVELS:

355. RED KNIFE, CHIEF. 366. DINGLE, THE OUTLAW. 367. THE GREEN RANGER.

NEW YORK:

BEADLE AND ADAMS, PUBLISHERS,

98 WILLIAM STREET.

THE PRAIRIE TOURNAMENT.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1872, by FRANK STARR & CO.,
In the office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington

THE EDWIN BRIESON.

TRANSPORT MADE SELECTION SOUR TO HOLLING

The Times, daring. 1919 1919 and the contract of the contract

22121 O 3 - 77:35 M

RELIDING AND ADAMS, PUBLISHERS,

THE MAD HORSEMAN;

OR,

THE PRAIRIE TOURNAMENT.

CHAPTER I.

TRAILING A SHADOW.

AT the time of which we write, a number of years ago, Independence, Missouri, was a noted rendezvous for trappers and hunters, scores of whom congregated there in the sammertime, bartering furs, etc., for such articles as were needful in the pursuit of their vocation. At the expiration of the trapping-season, these characters kept coming in every day for weeks, some going away again in a few days, but others remaining long after the transaction of their business, drinking up the profits of their labor, perhaps, or throwing them away at the card-table. Toward autumn their numbers began to thin as rapidly as they had increased, and during the winter months, men who followed this adventurous calling were seldom seen at the trading-post. The cold season was the chosen time for work with them, and as soon as the chilling north winds began to blow, they turned their backs on civilization, some repairing to secret hiding-places among the shadowy fastnesses of the Rocky Mountains, others stopping at beaver-haunts less distant, while a few penetrated to the head-waters of the North Mountain River, and neighboring streams, where they stealthily trapped the beaver, otter, fox, lynx, marten, etc., under the very noses of the treacherous Blackfeet.

Independence, at that time, was also a famous point for the congregation of emigrants from all parts of the country, on their way to the gold-mines of California and Oregon. As this post lay on the very verge of the civilized world, it was customary to stop there and finish preparations for the tedious and perilous journey across the plains, falling into large parties, and forming caravans of formidable strength in order that they might protect one another from the dreaded savages, through whose country they were to pass.

One bright afternoon in August, a man, looking quite lonely and discontented, strolled leisurely down to the river, which flows by at some distance from the village.

Considering the place in which we find him, he was a man of extraordinary appearance. His dress was cut in the latest city style; a dainty white cravat was fastened around his shining collar by a neat little bow in front, a costly diamond pin sparkled amid the snowy ruffles of his shirt, a heavy gold watch-chain, adorned with a variety of glittering charms, formed a concave bridge from his button-hole to his left vest pocket; and, in singular contrast with all these, he carried a rifle, a powder-flask and bullet-pouch, two knives in a belt underneath his coat, and a brace of pistols. His chin was shaven clean, but his cheeks and upper lip were covered by Lilky, light-colored whiskers, long and flowing, which he was constantly caressing when his hands were not otherwise employed. Gold-rimmed eye-glasses sat majestically on his nose, and the long, slender blue ribbon fastened to them swept gracefully back over his shoulder.

In short, he was one of those dandified personages frequently seen exhibiting themselves on the principal thoroughares of large cities. Probably the reader has recognized in him an old acquaintance. His name is Adolphus Perkins.*

Notwithstanding his appearance, which suggested the opinon that he had never before ventured so far west, he handled his rifle so naturally, and at times carried himself in such a hunter-like manner, that the first opinion was in danger of being shaken. Indeed, after spending over six months in the vast wilderness lying north of the Black Hills, with one of the most famous trappers west of the Mississippi, it is not strange that he should feel and act as though he were somewhat accustomed to wild life.

As we have said, he strolled down to the river, with a look of loneliness and dissatisfaction. His left hand alternately toyed with his watch-chain and his whiskers, nervously and mechanically, as if he were not aware of its wanderings. As he approached the stream, there was only one person in sight. This was a young man walking slowly up and down the bank, leading a horse. Adolphus Perkins merely bestowed on him a passing glance, paying no further attention to him.

"Hangnation!" he muttered, in no pleasant voice. "It's just my luck. I wonder if anybody ever knew me to have any better? If so, they would do me a favor by joggihg my memory, so that I could find some consolation in the recollection. Here I've landed in Independence, with the intention of making a journey across the plains, and, with my usual luck, I have arrived just in time to be too late. The last wagon-train left one week ago, (I'll be hanged if I didn't stop in St. Louis exactly that length of time,) and there is no telling when another will start."

He paused, sat down under a tree, and took off his hat. Laying his gun across his lap, and resting the crown of his head against the tree, he sat there for a long time in the cool shade, looking up at the blue sky and the few white clouds that flecked its illimitable disk. He had evidently fallen into a brown study, and the young man, whom we have mentioned as leading a horse backward and forward along the river-bank, cast frequent glances in that direction, as if half decided to go forward and form the acquaintance of the extravagantly dressed stranger.

At length the exquisite brought his eyes down from the sky, and changed his position. With a prodigious yawn he looked lazily about him, and then, thrusting his hand into an inside pocket, he hesitatingly brought something to light.

It was a small black picture-case, handsomely carved and inlaid with pearls. He opened it, with quite a changed ex pression of countenance, and looked long and earnestly at the miniature it contained. He became so absorbed in this pastime, that he seemed closely studying every feature of the person represented.

"By Jove! I'd like to know who she is," he said to himself. "With the single exception of Myrtle Forrest, I think I never saw as pretty a face. I'd give dollars to know who she is and where she resides. Demme! I believe I should call on her, without so much as asking leave. Can't be that she lives in these parts. Lost by one of the last emigrants I should wake up in the morning and find myself over head and ears in love. Like as not I'll find myself in that condition without seeing her, if I look at her picture much longer."

Adolphus Perkins was no poor judge of beauty. The likeness he admired so deeply was that of a beautiful, girlish face, possessing attractions of an indescribable nature, but portrayed with remarkable distinctness in the miniature. It was one of those strangely interesting faces, which invariably claim something more than a passing glance, and which make one feel as though he could look at it forever without tiring. The hair was dark and unadorned, pushed straight back from the classic brow, and falling in a shower of beautiful curls to the shoulders. The face was oval; the eyes large and soulful in their expression; the mouth rosy and deliciously tempting; and about the faultless lips played a smile that showed their owner was not entirely averse to mischief.

Adolphus was about to return the picture to his pocket, when a voice intruded on his solitude.

" Hallo, sir! What's that you've got?"

He started out of his pleasant day-dream, and looked hastily around to see who had spoken.

The young man leading the horse was coming toward him.

"I beg your pardon; did you speak to me?" he inquired, coolly regarding the stranger through his eye-glasses.

"I did, sir," answered the man, respectfully. "I saw you looking at something. I should like to know what it was?"

"Indeed! What is that to you?"

"Well, my friend, if that something was a miniature, and you found it in this vicinity, it's a great deal to me."

"Oh-ah-indeed!" stammered Adolphus.

His countenance fell instantly, and he stared at the stranger with a look of jealousy. This, then, was the rightful owner of the picture he had found, and, as a matter of course, was the accepted lover of the original! He was not an ill-looking fellow, either. He possessed a fine, open countenance, an honest, truthful, fearless eye, and (worst of all) what the ladies might term a killing moustache. Another attraction of his pleasant, manly face, was the look of indomitable cheerfulness it wore—a cheerfulness that often rose to playfulness, but never sunk to despondency. Adolphus regarded him narrowly for awhile, and then, after some hesitation, said:

"Suppose I didn't find the picture?"

"Then, sir, I have only to bid you good-day, begging your pardon for my seeming impertinence."

He said it in an open, honest way; and, with a pleasant smile and bow, he turned to leave the spot.

"Hold on," said Adolphus, whose sense of honor would not permit him to let the deception remain unaltered. "Hold on. This picture isn't mine. If it's yours, take it. I picked it up near this spot, this morning. I suppose it's yours."

The stranger took the case with thanks, and opened it to make sure that there was no mistake. He immediately said it was the one he had lost, and thanked the finder again.

"I have been looking for it for more than an hour," he said. "To any one else it could hardly be esteemed an article of value, but I should have been very sorry indeed to leave this place without recovering it." And he put it in his pocket.

"Just my luck!" growled Perkins. "I'd like dem'd well to have kept that reflection, but if you love her and she loves you—why, that's an end of it, and I may as well consider my goose cooked."

The stranger was obviously surprised.

"I fail to comprehend," said he. "You appear interested in this picture. Pardon me, but it can hardly be possible that the original is an acquaintance of yours."

"Good gracious, no! I never saw her in my life, but I'll be hanged if I wouldn't like to! I'll tell you what, my friend," exclaimed Perkins, rising to his feet and laying his hand on the young man's shoulder; "I don't mind telling you, because you are in a condition to sympathize with me. The fact is, I'm—ahem—I'm struck! That is to say, I—I have almost fallen in love with this damsel, merely by looking at her picture. By Jove! the angels can not have prettier faces than the one that reflection represents, and, whoever you are, I consider you any thing but a gentleman to steal her heart when my back was turned."

"You talk in riddles," returned the other, smiling.

"Of course I do," was the muttered rejeinder. "Dence take me! I never talk in any other way. But, never mind. I say, sir, this young lady must think the world of you! I can tell by her looks that she is capable of a deep, sincere and everlasting love."

"I should be extremely sorry if she did not think a great deal of me. She is my sister."

"Your sister!"

" Certainly."

"Oh Lord! You don't tell me so!"

Adolphus leaned against the tree completely out of breath, and stared open-mouthed at the stranger. Only his sister! That put a new phase on affairs. Recovering binself, and feeling that an apology was expected of him, Adelptas cleared his throat, and confusedly stammered:

"Forgive me, old fellow. I didn't know-that is, I-year -I mean, I had no idea I was talking about your siter.

Confound it! I hope you are not offen led?"

" Not at all," laughed the stranger, "not at all. You have sail nothing that even my sister could be offended at; then why should I? On the contrary, I have taken quite a lilling to you in the few minutes we have been conversita, at I am willing that we should be friends, if you are and of a different inclination."

"Give me your hand, old buck; give me your hand. You're a trump, you are. What's your name?"

"Jack Weller."

" From where?"

" Cincinnati."

"And I am Adolphus Perkins, from Bot natyour servie," They shook each other heartily by the hand.

"Take a cigar," said Adolphas, producing a well-til. ? case of fragmant divance. He was in an extil at heart.

fach took one, and began to sande. The Alexanter tured to ask what had brought his companion to that part of the country.

"Gold-fever," was the reply. " Not that I have got it, but my father was lared from home by visions of wealth."

"No! Where is your father?"

- "He is with the emigrants that le't here one week ago. He and my mother, and my sister-"
  - "Your sister ?"
  - " Of course."
  - " Is she crossing the plains?"
  - "To be sure. Why not?"
- "Why, yes, in let 1—why not? Perfectly natural, of course. Pray exerce me—ahem! So sic is going to the gell-regions with your father? Just so. By the way, what is her name, if I may ask?"
  - " Julia."
- "Julia? Exactly. Just so. I tell you, Weller, I admire her style of beauty. And so she is going to California? Just so. Exactly. But, my dear fellow, your presence here still remains unexplained. It seems you did not go to California with the rest of the family."
- "No, but I intend to. I was left behind to settle up father's busin so, which required a greater time than had been expected. I was to join them at Independence, but did not arrive until yest rly, and then I learned that they were pone. They left a letter, however, telling me to wait until another caravan should start."
- "Blained if you ain't in the same predicament I am," exclaimed Adolphus, slapping his thigh. "I guess we'll have to wait together. Companions in misery, ain't we, Weller?"
  - " Are you on your way across the continent?"
- "Ain't I though? Why, bless you, I left the Atlantic coast with the determination to stop only when the Pacific coast was reached. Unless, in lead," he added, to himself, "I should be fortunate enough to find a wife between those two points."
- "But we can not tell when another party of emigrants will start," said Jack Weller. "From the looks of things at 1 see at, a caravan will not leave this place for some time to come, and I've been thinking about it till I've decided not to wait."
  - "Not wait? What, then, do you intend doing?"
- "You see that horse standing there? To-morrow morning, at an early hour, I shall mount him, and turn his head to-ward the setting sun. I'll put him forward at good speed, and shall overtake my parents long before they reach the Rocky Mountains."

"Decided to pursue 'em, eh?"

- "I have. I presume you are not without a herse, Per-
  - "Got as good a one as ever bore saddle."
- "Then, since we have the same destination in view, per-

Our hero's eyes opened very wile at this.

- "My stars!" he exclaimed, scratching his head; "it will be an awful dangerous journey to undertake by curscless. It a band of mardering red skins should surround us, what could we do?"
- "I have taken all that into consideration," said the years man, coolly, "and am not in the least afraid."
- "Oh! neither am I—neither am I," Ad I; has histored to say. "I didn't mention the fact because of fear, but because I thought you had not borne in mind what a helpless and hopeless condition such an event would place us in. I am a stranger to fear, and always have been. I was an any the Indians two years ago, and killed several; batchere bugginally bear on the Yellowstone, and slaughtered a while pack of wolves. I am not afraid—oh, no!"

"Then you will go with me?"

"Of course, if you wish it."

Perhaps Adolphus, even then, would have found some excuse for remaining behind, but for the bountful face that the before his mental vision, and the reflection that specifical Weller was with the party his friend wished him to join. Here was an opportunity to see the lady we expicture he had found, and to form her acquisition e. This thought drowned the remembrance of the risk incurred in the undertaking, and he was easer to be off.

So it was decided that they should commence the joint y alone on the morrow.

They sat there in pleasant conversation, tall I no had fine, until the sun went down, when Jack Well radius to charge of his home, which had been grading mear by, and the two men slowly returned to their helpings.

CHAPTER II.

IN PURSUIT OF THE WAGON-TRAIN.

On the following morning, just as the sun rose, two horsemen galloped out of Independence, evidently equipped for a journey, with their faces turned resolutely, westward. They were Adolphus Perkins and his new friend, Jack Weller. They were looking fresh and full of vigor, after a night of comfortable rest, and, both being armed to the teeth, they seemed ready to meet their savage foes on hostile grounds. Adolphus frequently found occasion to remark on the probability of their being a sas-inated by the "deuced red-skins," but his friend cheered him by recalling him to the remembrance that the emigrants were only a week out, that they could be no great distance away, and that it would be almost a wonder if wild Indians should come so near the settlements as to intercept them before they could reach the caravan. With this fact in view, they traveled with comparative leisure.

That night they procured rest and shelter in a lonely cabin, where live I an old hunter and his family. When morning broke, they were in their saddles and on their way, making the best of the cooler part of the day. Civilization thinned rapidly as they advanced, and that night they slept in the open air, with nothing but their blankets to project them from the falling dew. Adelphus was more accustomed to this than his friend—although, judging from appearances, one could not help thinking differently—and consequently took to it more naturally than Weller.

They were favor I with fine weather, a'though, on the third day out, a themse released two hours duration, related the menotony of the sunshine, and purified the standard reto a degree that rendered traveling much pleasants for the time. On this same afternoon they met a party of landers coming in from the mountains, well laden with speils. On making inquiries they learn I that this party I of met the wagon-train, and that the latter was making rapid headway under the piloting of its gui ie. One of the hunters then went on to say that they had nooned with the emigrants, and that while they were discussing their dinner a single horseman had hove in sight on the western horizon, and came galloping toward them.

"We all thought," said the loquacious fellow, "that the beaver war goin' to j'ine us in our meal, but, shoot me if he didn't stop 'bout half a mile away, and set stock-still in his saddle, starin' at the encampment, fur several minutes. Then he turned to the left, struck his horse into a dead run, and made a complete circle round the camp, wavin' his arms in the air like a blamed lanatic. After that he cantered off, appreciately satisfied, and he didn't show his may ag'in while we's thar."

The story of the talkative hunter was scarcely heeld, and consequently made little or no impression on the min is of these to whom it was related. Perhaps neither Perkins nor Valuer would ever have thought of the circumstance afterward, had they not been repeatedly reminded of it by repetitions of the circumstance itself—and reminded of it in a manner that prohibited every possibility of their ever forgetting it again while they lived.

From the first they had followed the well-beaten trall notes by traders and emigrants, and each day the track of the coravan ahead of them grew from her, as it were, encountries the darger country.

But to dwell en every particular of the long and to it is chose would be to try the reader's patience was equally.

On the sixth day of their journey it because evident that the party they were parsuing could not be in restlem take the four hours in advance. Toward noon Jack Well 1 to take down an anteloge with his rifle, and was considerable classic in consequence thereof. The choicest portlons of the unimal were secured for the mid-day mod; the horse were picketed, a fire was hindled, and the next was specific slewered, properly roassed and forthwith days are holdly consideration a knowledge that there are times when shaply existing tion a knowledge that there are times when shaply existing is enjoyment. Heaven and earth seemed permeated with what we will venture to term silent music, soothing the soul into a delightful screnity, elevating the spirits, and seeming to lift up mortality into an atmosphere of divine parity.

When they had finished their dinner our travelers did not mount and away at once, but lingered on the spot long enough to smoke a cigar apiece, generously furnished by Adolphus. Our hero, not forgetting a lesson learned in a fortuer western tour, had bethought him to lay in a bountiful supply of the companionable weed on the present occasion before leaving home. For a time they conversed desultorily, at they reclined languidly on the grass, but they soon relapsed into listless silence, and puffed away unconscious of each other's presence. The delightful temperature, and the sweet insulible music that filled the air, awakened an answering vitaration in their souls, and infused in them such a feeling of malm, delicious rest that they grew more and more unwilling to move or speak.

Before they could acquire energy enough to arouse themselves from their inertia, their pleasant dreams were interruptel and their activity restored in a manner quite unexpected. All at once a deep, gruff voice exclaimed:

"Sleep on, strangers! It's a free country!"

This not only broke the spell that bound them, but caused them to start to their feet and seize their guns.

When this they had done, the sight that met their eyes, and the loud, by try laugh that greeted their cars, made them passe and stare in wonder and confusion. There, within ten passe and stare in wonder and confusion. There, within ten passe of them, stood a man, coolly regarding the youthful twain with his small, twinkling eyes, holding in one hand a rifle as long as himself, while the other grasped the bridle rein of a horse—a large, powerful animal of a jet-black color. The man's appearance proclaimed him a hunter and trapper—one whose choon home was the wildest solitude of the American continent—whose cho-en pastime was contention with the Indians—who had reveled in dangers for years, and fared nothing mortal. He was neither short nor tall, but of maliam hight, wiry, well developed, a splendid type of physical bearty. His dress consisted entirely of skins, fitting his limbs tightly, and showing the play of his muscles to good advantage. His face was expressive and pleasant, the this rugged, sunburnt and partially covered with beard. In short, he was a character in whom an honest man would have to cognized a faithful friend, but who was no less ardent as an enemy to any who called forth his hatred. The years mean were abashed as well as surprised to think he had come so near without their knowledge, and leading a horse at that.

But with Adolphus it was soon over. His surprise subdenly changed to blank amazement. His mouth flew open, his eyes dilated, his fingers expanded, his gun fell unlessed to the ground, as he started back with an exclamation of mingled import! Then, snatching off his hat, he florg it into the air in an ecstasy of delight, and shouted vociferously;

"Whoop! whoop! hurrah! whoop! It's Dasky Duriell! It's Dusky Darrell! Hurrah! I hope I may be knocked to the other side of Christmas if it isn't Dusky Darrell!"

Evidently astonished by these singular demonstrations, the trapper ceased laughing and looked scarchingly at the author of them. Instantly a gleam of recegnition overspread his countenance, and he came forward with his hand out odd, leaving the black horse at liberty. His large, brown had grasped the more delicate one of his former friend, while his shock long and heartily, without uttering a word, his factions revealing the pleasure afforded him by this maching.

At length he stepped back, folded his hands over the manzzle of his ritle, and surveyed the young man from head to feet. Then, in his deep, rumbling voice, he said:

"Wal, Spider, I never spected to see yet in the parts ag'in; blowed if I did!"

Adolphus laughed gleefully.

"And I'm powerful glad to see you," alled the trajeer A lolphus slapped his this h and stamped his feet

"Thunderation!" he caled, "I do have a small of hall a long intervals, and this is one of 'em. I should have lived dollars for the privilege of meeting you on this tour of the cale and here you have turned up when so he an event was he expected. Oh, Lord! give me your hand such. Danell This is my friend, Jack Weiler, an excelent fellow, when he had a life! In with at Independence. You see this nam, Jack? His had is Dasky Durrell, and there isn't a haver man this sale of the Mi sissippi. You have heard me remark that this is not the first time I have been on the prairies? Well, there stands the man who was with me in my first experience of western life."

Jack had been at a loss to understand what it all meant, until thus enlightened by his friend.

" Wal, Spider, I'm blowed if I ever'spected to see that face of your's in these parts ag'in," repeated the trapper.

- "You might have expected it," declared Adolphus. "I told you when we parted, that I should be out here again before long."
- "Wagh! I know yer said it, but I 'lowed 'twar all moon-shine."
  - " You didn't think I'd be as good as my word?"

" No."

" Why?"

The trapper's eyes twinkled roguishly as he replied:

"I'll tell yer why. You used to sw'ar a dozen times a day that of you war' lucky enough to git back to the States with yer skulp, you'd never leave 'em ag'in if you lived a thousand years."

"Pooh! that was when I was out of humor."

"It was when you thought of gittin' a crack on the head from some pesky Blackfoot's tomahawk," corrected the other.

"Demnition! what do you mean?" snapped Perkins, turning very red, and glancing at Weller as if to discover whether he had understood the hunter's remark or not.

Dusky Darrell chipped his hands on his sides and gave vent to a leigh which, though it elicited no noise, shook his entire frame. Perkins turned redder than before, but made a feeble attempt to smile.

"See yer, Spider," said Darrell, when his mirth had subsided; "reckon you hain't forgot that you used to be afeard of Injuns!"

"Mo afraid!" Adolphus became the very picture of injured into cence. Then, with a smile, he turned to Jack Weller and exil: "Of course you will place no weight to my friend's worls. He has always declare! (in jest, of course) that I am afraid of Indians, though I have never given him the least can to think so. Now, old fellow," turning to the trapper again, " if you don't cease rallying me, I shall not tell you the news from St. Louis."

It was plain that Adolphus was not a little annoyed by what his eccentric friend had said, but he could not have hit upon a better mode of changing the subject, than that which he adopted. He had no sooner mentioned news from St. Louis, than the trapper's face became grave and cager, and the spoke much more quickly that he was in the halit of speaking, when he said:

"What is it, youngster? Did you come through St. Louey?

and did you see yer cousin and his wife?"

"Lord, yes! Spent a whole week with 'cm."

"Yer didn't though?"

A red spot glowed on each of the trapper's sunburnt cheeks, and his bright, twinkling orbs fairly snapped with cager interest.

" Are they all well?" he asked, huskily.

"Every one of them," was the reply. "Rathburn, Myrtle, old lady, childern—all well."

"They hain't got childern, though?"

"Haven't they? Lord bless you! they've got two of the prettiest little fellows you ever saw-twins!"

It being unnecessary to note down an account of the past —which, in all probability, the reader is familiar with—we pass over a long and carnest conversation between A loghus and the old trapper. It was interesting, both in subject as I the unique style of interlocution, but as it has no bearing upon any other story than one that has already been told, its connection with this would be unwarrantable. On discovering that the conversation concerned none but the participators therein, Jack Weller graciously withdrew, and employed himself in rubbing his horse's limbs, overturning the contents of his pack for examination, etc.

When past events were reviewed to the satisfaction of both parties, Dusky Darrell came abruptly down to the present.

"Come, Spider," said he; "you hain't tell me yet what brung you to the prairies on this 'casion. Not gold, I take it—nor yet a burnin' fur adventure. When we part I at Independence, I remember hearin' you say as how you has again be expected 'long in this d'rection ag'in 'fore many years, but, now I come to think on't, I b'lieve you said it war' to be a weddin'-tower. Whar's yer squaw, Spider?"

Adolphus coughed, and looked confused.

"I have none," he replied.

"Tain't a weddin'-tower, then?"

an eye on Myrtle Forrest. Well, I soon found out that 'Illathbarn was dead struck after her himself, and, not forgetting that he was my cousin, I magnanimously yielded up the prize to him. I am now traversing the West in search of a wife!"

Darrell bent forward, and looked keenly at Adolphus, as if incl.ned to doubt his sincerity. Then he threw his head back and broke into another silent but hearty laugh, to the intense annoyance and confusion of its object.

"Spider, I've allus said you war' the most cur'us chap I ever run afoul of, and smash me if I take it back now. In s'arch of a wife! Ain't thar more feminines on t'other side of the Mississipp than thar is out hyur? Jist 'cause that little Myrtle was found in the wilderness, it don't foller that purty white gals can be picked up among the Injuns ev'ry day."

"That is neither here nor there," said Adolphus, loftily. "I did not expect to find a wife among the Indians, for the simple reason that I haven't sufficient faith in the good will of that race of people to venture into their midst in quest of one. I think I shall have better luck than you imagine. I am now on the trail of one of the prettiest damsels it ever fell to my lot to see."

" Are, hey ?"

"Indeed I am. She is Jack Weller's sister."

Whereupon he told the trapper all about the picture he had found at Independence, and how the owner claimed his property. He expatiated considerably on the exquisite beauty of the copy, and he remarked that it must be beyond the power of the strongest imagination to conceive of the divine loveliness of the original. The trapper heard him through, with an expression which it would be difficult to describe idumining his visage, and when the story ended he appeared on the eve of exploding into another fit of laughter. Instead of giving vent to his amusement, however, he simply inquired:

" Whar is the gal, at present writin'?"

"She and the rest of the family (except Jack there) are with an emigrant party on their way to California. We started with the intention of overtaking them. We judge from the trail that we will be able to join them to-merrow."

Darrell looked at the trail, and informed him that he was right. By brisk riding they would assuredly be able to evertake the emigrants on the next day.

"Can't you go along with us, old fellow?" asked Adolphus.

The trapper smiled.

"S'pose you think I've nothin' to do but tramp 'reund after you," he said, good-naturedly.

"Don't think any thing of the kind," protested the other, "but your time doesn't seem occupied at present, unless you are on your way to the trapping-grounds. The fact is, dominit, I don't relish the idea of parting so seen."

Darrell relapsed into silence, and looked away toward the southern horizon with that steady, vacant stare which shows the mind to be utterly wrapped up in itself. At leasth he came out of his reverie, and sail, quietly:

"Wal, Spider, now as we've come together after a lig sepiration, I allow that's no use bein' in a hurry to turn our backs on each other. I'm goin' to trap a spill in the It chy Mountains this season, and I reckon I won't be coin' much out of my course if I rides with you till yer overthes the wagons."

"Then you will accompany us?"

"That's what I've been sayin'."

"Good! A man doesn't feel so confounded uncomfortable riding across these prairies, when there's a man of experience in the party."

Jack Weller joined them in time to hear the last remarks, and expressed himself highly gratified by the trapper's decision to accompany them.

"But," said he, exhibiting a little impatience, "if we have in redime, I fear we shall not overtake car party to in "

"This beaver war 'bout to make the same signstion," said the trapper, glancing at the sun. "We kin make sev'ral miles yet afore sundown, if we git off 'thout losin' more time."

In less than three minutes after this, they were all in their saddles, cantering briskly westward. The sun was three hours high when they started, and they made good use of the time granted them before it set. When night came on they turned aside from the trail and camped in a cottonwood grove. After discussing their supper, they sat around the cheerful fire smoking, Dasky Darrell whiling away the time by reciting thrilling reminiscences of his adventurous career, for the amusement of his companions.

CHAPTER III.

THE MYSTERIOUS RIDER.

Naxr morning they were up bright and early, and were delighted to find the weather most auspicious for the continuation of their journey. Preparations were hastily made, and when the sun's first rays shot athwart the sky their animals were between their knees, moving at a brisk but gentle canter along the prairie trail.

The company of Dasky Darrell proved a great pleasure to the young a lyenturers; scarcely less so to Weller, who had never met him before, than to Adolphus himself. He was a mowhat eccentric, to be sure, as men of his class generally are, but beneath his eccentricities beat a heart honest and uncharge able, ever true to a triend, but exceedingly bitter toward an enemy. Fleshes of humor frequently broke through his grave exterior, and, from sundry hits at Adolphus from time to time, it became apparent that our hero had, from a new construction, and apparent that our hero had, from any construction, once been the principal 'scape-valve for these flashes of humor.

Darrell said he had recently learned of a place in the Rocky Mountains about ling with beaver and otter, and it was for this place he was bound at the present time.

"It's more'n two hundred mile north of the p'int whar this trail strikes the mountains," he added, "and this route ain't my neardest one by a long shot. If I git that at the time I want to git thar, I'll have to leave you when we reach the wagon train, and strike off in another d'rection."

They kept their horses at a rapid and steady pace all the ferenoon, and mile after mile was measure loff by the pounding hoofs of the animals.

Just at noon, as they drew rein for the purpose of roasting a prairie-chicken, which had been killed for dinner, the trapper surprised his companions by raising his hand, and pointing straight ahead.

"Look yonder," he said.

They looked in the direction designated, but saw nothing.

"Yer doesn't look fur 'nough away," added the trapper.

They saw it now. With careful looking, the object—or objects—alluded to became visible to them. At this time the level prairie was on every side of them, as far as the eye could reach, and not so much as a single tree was visible in any direction. Directly over their horses' heads—a number of small white spots were seen. At first they appeared stationary, but a more careful scrutiny showed them to be in more tion, and slowly ascending a swell in the prairie.

" What are they?" inquired Adolphus.

"That's yer caravan," was the reply.

"Good!" exclaimed Weller; "this is letter than I expected. Two more hours' ride, and we shall be with them."

"Thar's jist whar you're wrong, youngster. Two has ride and we'll be a good 'eal cluser to 'em than we are now, but we've got to make our hoses show their mettle if we overtake them emigrants inside of six hour."

"Six hours!"

"Six hours. You'll have distance wrong every time it you don't b'ar in mind that you're on the plains. Them wagons ain't as near as they look. It's now 'bout norm. If we lose no more time than'll be required in pattin' away this fowl, we'll come up to 'em 'bout the time the san got down."

They dismounted now, and hastily gathered together what little fael they could find in that vicinity. A fire was made, the chicken roasted and devoured, and it was no sooner done than the three men were again in their saddles and on their way.

Two hours passed. They could see that they were steadily less ning the distance between them and the wagons, though they were still far apart. .

Another hour passed. The wagons were very distinguishable now, with their white canvas tilts, and the horsemen, riding in a lyance, behind and on either side of them, could also be seen. If no accident happened within the next three hours, Darrell sail they would very nearly, if not quite, overtake the emigrants at the end of that time. Whether they themselves had as yet been discovered by the party in front, could not be determined by any manifestations on the part of the latter.

All at once the trapper drew rein with a sudden jerk. His companions followed his example, and looked at him for an explanation.

" What now?" queried Perkins.

"Look right in our path, straight ahead," said the trapper, coolly.

They looked as directed, and saw what they had before failed to notice, but which the watchful eyes of Darrell had not failed to observe. It was nothing more, however, than a single horseman riding along at some distance behind the main body of emigrants, as if some trilling accident had caused him to fall in the rear.

- " Do you mean that solitary rider?"
- " Sartinly."
- "I see nothing extraordinary there," said Adolphus.

"Nor I," added Weller.

The trapper locked at both of them, and a broad smile illumined his visage.

"Look ag'in," said he. "You think that feller's goin't tother way. He ain't. He's movin' in this direction!"

" Coming toward us?"

Perkins and Weller looked at each other in surprise.

"What is he coming this way for?" asked the latter

"That remains to be seen," was the quiet response.

"Do you think he belongs to the emigrant party?"

"Ruther think not—can't say fur sartin. He's furder away from the wagons than he 'pears to be, and if I ain't powerf I mistook, he's comin' this way. Yas, I know he is. Can't be likely he's comin' to meet us, and see who we be. Anybody 'd be a blamed fool to do that. Reckon he den't belong to the party. Hunter, maybe, comin' in from the mountains."

" Well, shall we sit here and wait for him to come up?

or continue on our way?"

" Continue on our way, in course," returned the trapper.

Without more words they gave the animals the rein and galloped forward. Adolphus ventured the opinion that they would do well to turn aside from the trail, and give the horseman a wide birth, but he immediately about loned it when he saw the look of blended drollery and surprise on Darrell's face. The trapper reminded him that if the stranger was a friend, all would be well—if an enemy, they were in re than his match in numbers; consequently, there exill be no danger in either case.

So they rode on, with unabated speck, toward the stranger, and the stranger rode on, with unabated speck, toward them. It soon became obvious, even to the less experienced eyes of the two young men, that the stranger was really approaching, as the trapper had averred, and not reading, as they had at first supposed. The rate at which they and the experience party were going, rapidly contracted the space between them, and Dusky Darrell was soon able to assert that the unknown rider was a white man. But the others had not the file his being an Indian; therefore the discovery was neither a surprise nor a relief to them.

At la t, when they were within a mile of e. h other, the stranger came to a dead high. For a minute his at stackstill in his saddle, apparently gizher at the approaching thin, with a yell that was borne faintly to the ease for a friends, he waved his hand over his hook turn I will from the trail, and dashed away at troke a kespel to card the south. With a side view their proposed, they saw the strange equestrian at a better advance of than left to. He was to all appearance, standing erect in his stirrups; his hand as the coverel, and his leng thair flying at the mercy of the whal, as was also a long, light mantle that streamed back from his shoulders. The steed he bestrode was large, well-built and fleet-footed, and, altogether, the horse and rider presented a wild, picturesque aspect.

Our friends drew their animals down to a walk, and watched the strange being as he swiftly retreated southward.

"I knew he wouldn't have courage enough to meet us," said Adolphus, looking inexpressibly relieved.

"He is surely an Indian, after all," said Weller.

"A pale-face, or I'm mighty deceived," said Darrell.

"He looks like an Indian."

" He ain't, howsomever."

"Then he is a madman?"

"That's likely. But whoever he is, or whatever he is, he's a quare chap, shore as shootin'."

They watched the stranger as he sunk further and further into the distance—till he became a mere wavering speek on the horizon, and then disappeared altogether.

Now that this phenomenon was gone, and gone unexplained, our alventurers showed a determination to lose no more time by once more putting their horses to their speed, and desaing steadily forward on the track of the emigrants.

Just at sunset the emigrants came to a halt, and began to form their encampment for the night, after the fashion usually practiced on the plains. The wagons were placed as closely together as possible—wheels and tongue locked together—and arranged in a rude circle, so as to inclose a hold with space of ample dimensions for the congregation of the tatire purty, in the preparation and discussion of the evening mode.

It was immediately after the arrangement of the warons was completed, that the trio of travelers rode upon the scale. Half a dozen men came out a short distance to meet them, and give them a mest cordial welcome. Among the namber was Jack Weller's father, who shook his son warraly by the tand, and soil it was a most agreeable surprise, and declared his mather and sitter would be delighted, and that little Rosa Brown would be overloyed. Mr. Weller proved his loquacity and proved all often, and then showed that he could be posted to straigers, by expressing his gratification that Jack had fallen into such worthy company on his journ of the sincerely hoped the trapper and Perkins would ren ... with them for many days, if not until their dectination was reached, and expressed much regret when the trapper informed him he would have to leave them on the next morning.

As may be conjectured, Adolphus was barning with importance to see one other member of the endication party, and he was glad when they at last entered the inclosure. No sooner were they within the circle of wazons, than they found themselves surrounded by strangers of all sizes and sexes. They all dismounted, and permitted Mr. Weller to take charge of their animals; then Adolphus began to look around in search of the fair being whose likeness he had had the exquisite pleasure of seeing every day for a week. While thus employed, his search was arrested by a joyful exchamation behind him.

"Jack, my dear boy!"

Adolphus whirled round, and, as he did so, the sight that met his eyes fairly took his breath for the n. m. M. J.ck Weller was exchanging greetings with two woren. One of them was evidently his mother—a fine-looking lady of forty, or thereabouts, with regular features, slightly wrinkled, and a pleasant, smiling countenance. But the other was the one that riveted our hero's attention, and caused him to forget his good breeding so far as to stare almost ruledy at hor. In her he recognized the original of the capy he had found in late Independence.

Beautiful Julia Weller! It would be folly to attempt any thing like an accurate description of her charms. Lucyunge of ours can not bring her before your immination as she really was. Even Adolphus, who had seen her picture, and studied it by the hour, was surprised at first sight of her living self. The wealth of dark hair, falling a set her shoulders in a shower of glossy curls—the arche logger was, feelt-lessly penciled by facture's brush—the chaste for each cost velvet checks—the rosy mouth, and glowing the at-self the representation so life-like. But here was the sweet staile—the clear musical voice—the ever-varying expressions of her face—the crimson tide, surging beneath the transparent skin at each new emotion—the large, brilliant orbs, whose bewildering leastly no artist could portray. These were charms Adolthus had scarcely thought of, and they sent a thrill through every pulse in his being. How soon he would have recovered him-elf, by his own efforts, it is impossible to say, but he was opportunely brought to his senses by the voice of his friend.

"Come, Perkins, allow me to make you acquainted with my mother and sister. Mother—Julia—this is my new but valued friend, Mr. Perkins, from Boston."

This precluded all possibility of escape, even if he had not littled such a thing. He was by no means a bashful man, but he blushed a little on this occasion, though he did not fail to execute a profound bow. He accept gracefully the hand of each lady as it was extended to him, slightly pressing that of the younger one, and then appearing immeasurably confused in the consciousness that he had run the risk of incurring her displeasure.

"I lied the good fortune, Miss Weller—aliem!—of finding your picture a short time since. Consequently, your face is not altogether unfamiliar to me," he stammered.

"Of finding my picture, sir?" she echoed, in astonishment.

"Yes, I—that is, you—I mean Jack, there; he had a portraiture of you, which he lost at Independence, and which I had the hour of finding. It was through it we became friends."

"In le 1?" She turned toward her brother with a smile. "You careless fellow! I can never safely entrust any thing to your case again. It has not be not month since you lost that pretty backet uncle gave me, and but for this gentleman that mind three would have shared its fate."

"I. ...," said Jack, playfully twitching one of his sister's Carls, "the accident of losing it must have been a fortunate one, or the accident of this gentleman's finding it must have been unfortunate."

"That is not clear."

&quot;Isn't it? Suppose I had been more careful of the picture than I really was? In all probability you would never have met my esteemed friend, Mr. Perkins. Bearing that fact in mind, if you are still indignant at the temperary less, you can not be pleased at the liberty I have taken in introlacing my friend. Is it clear now, my dear little laly?"

"No, 'tis not! I am sure Mr. Perkins is too wine to look at the affair in the light you do."

Adolphus bowed his acknowledgment of this compliment.

"At all events, Jack," sail Mrs. Weller, "the finder is more to be commended than the lower, and I have you did not neglect to thank your friend sufficiently."

"Surely," said Jack, "you can not think me capable of wasting breath to thank the finder of so insignificant an article as that?"

Here Adolphus determined to make a striking remark.

"He offered his thanks, madam, but I could not accept them as a remuneration. They were not sufficient. Undoubtly it was the hight of impulence to desire a reward for so small an act, but, to confees the truth, nothing less than the picture itself would have been deemed a satisfact ry compensation for the restoration."

They all laughed at this, and the peach-th in a Juliu's cheeks spread all over her face.

"I will not trouble you with the care of my mi latter longer, Jack," said she, turning to him and helber out her hand.

He produced the diminutive subject of their converts on, and returned it to its owner. She storely planted at it, but instantly handed it to Adolphus. Our here was struck diminutive to the amazement.

"Take it," she sail, with a lauching clane at Jok. "I believe it will be safer in your hands than in the self my brother." Then growing serious, she all he "Pine at partit, sir, not as a present, but as a simple as an attornation of friendship—for my brother's friends are always take."

Adolphus' heart was beating a raint his vest, and these homest too full for utterance. He took the prosect, take it over and over in his heard, and the many that it was a literate to the contract of the con

"I did not expect this Me We at he in the pass to only excelled by your Leauty. I am very, very thankful indeel, and I promise you that this handsome memento shall be cherished to my dying day, as the most highly valued of all my treasures."

"But where is your other friend, Jack?" asked Julia, skillfally turning the conversation into another channel.

"You mean Dusky Duriell?" said Jack. "Yonder he is, talking with father. He is one of the most distinguished trappers living, if Mr. Perkins' information is correct."

"And it is, I assure you," said Adolphus. "Darrell and !

tr.; 1 to ther one season on the Yellowstone-"

"Ah! here comes Ro a!" exclaimed Jack, just then.

Adolphus looked up at him, and saw his checks flush and his eyes spackle. Then he looked around, and saw approaching, a young girl, plainly but neatly dressed. She was small of stature but faulth sly formed, very pretty and very shy, smiling sweetly and blushing beautifully.

"I am glad to see you, Jack," she said, as she laid one of Ler little hands in his, in a confiling, affectionate way.

"And I am Lappy to find you well, my dear Rosa," he return I, stooping to kiss her brow.

Then the pretty, shy little maiden, whose name was Rosa Brown, was introduced to Adolphus, who understood at once that there two loved each other, and took no pains to conceal the fact. Poor Resa was an orphan, who had never known har mather, and whose father had died years ago. Mr Weller, her father's dearest friend in life, had taken her to his had in childhood, and reared her with his own children, who were so kind to her that the sorrow of her early beleaved hat was greatly all viated. In course of time they all because so attached to her as to feel that if she were taken away, it would be like depriving them of one of their own factorly, and Jack had resided that she never should be taken away.

By this that it was growing dark, and a number of tires were being by the entirents. In a few minutes the tires at 11 a few minutes the fires, variously cusployed in the preparation of supper.

Daily Dur Harl Adelphus ate with the Weller family, and the latter was happy in securing a place of the lovely Julia. He kept up an animate I convers tion with her during the entire meal, and was charmed by the rapilly-changing expressions of her face. At times it would somethic she could not be any thing but grave and carnest when taking but the very next moment a ray of wit would find like a ray of sunshine through the sober exterior, or her eyes would brighten with a gleam of mischief, showing that she was only a sunny-tempered, fun-loving girl, after all, sustificant left cated though she was. Her laugh was low, rippling and massical, never too loud, but often hearty, and inversely infortious. Her charms were irresistible, and Add into a life of the was nearly in love with her already!

After supper, Jack mentioned the strange has men, when he and his friends had seen that afternoon.

"He was a queer-looking specimen of homenity," of any lack, as he quietly paffed his cirar, "though he bery lack handsome, flect-footed horse. At the ellipse of row with we saw him, I should have judged that he was an India. He wore no hat, his hair was long, and his manner was will and savage. But Darrell declared that he was a while range and I have only to conclude that my impression was wrong. From the direction in which he was traveling when we that saw him, we supposed he had passed you, and had been the your midst. Do you know aught of the follow, father?"

"Why, yes, my son, but little more than you have Yes were mistaken in supposing that he had been among as, for none of us have seen him within a less distance than half amile. The fact is, this same mysterious stranger has degree us ever since we left the settlements, and we have or was smewhat see istonable to him. So, that she all single around us, waving his arms in every constant the late of the stranger of the late of the stranger.

signs."

"Hain't yer never s'picione les low here. This be up to

"No; so ha thing has not occur if to us. Our will hapis a very saga io is person, amires us that we had being the danger from him. He says he has seen the many that before, and knows him to be perfectly harmle s, thoughthere."

44 Insane?"

" Wild-mad-a raving maniae!"

"Exactly. Who is your guide? What's his handle?"

" Nim Dedzel."

- "What!" exclaimed Darrell, exhibiting some astonishment.
- "Hush!" said Mr. Weller. "Yonder he is now, if you wish to see him. That is our guide."

CHAPTER IV.

THE GUIDE UNDER SURVEILLANCE.

Mr. Weller was pointing over the trapper's shoulder. He turned his head to look, as did the rest of the party, and easy near by a man, walking slowly up and down a small clear space, with the air of one whose mind is buried in profound reverie. Judging from his dark, lowering brow, and the look of savage discontent he wore, his thoughts were not extremely pleasant. His arms were folded over his breast; he smoked his pipe with long, vigorous pulls, sending volume upon volume of smoke into the air; and he set his feet on the ground as if he were vengefully crushing the life out of somebody at every step. He was tall, broad-shouldered and heavily-built, and his dress and accounterments were simiher to these usually worn by hunters and trappers of the Western prairie. Ever and anon the light of a camp-fire would reveal his dark vi use. It was not a pleasant vi ce to le tipet, either, but was one with which the meet a. .itfaut derver could not be favorably impress at the it, as! Alliphus thought the man would make an exe il atta . . l. I f r the r pre entation of an Italian brigani, er u Spanish pirate.

"The," wil Mr. Weller again, "is our guile. That is

Nim Dedzel."

"The very man, or I'm a ghost!" muttered the trapper, with a distristful look at the object of his remark.

"Do you know him?' usked Mr. Weller.

Instead of replying to this question, the trapper inquirel: "How come yer to git him for a guide?"

"I can not tell His services were already engaged when we arrived at Independence. But why do you ask?"

"I s'pose he's proved satisfactory so far?"

"Most assuredly! Nobody has found the slightest care of complaint in him. He is shrewd, brave and problem, and although he is sometimes surly and gruff without any vielda cause, I believe he will do all that is expected of him."

The trapper did not answer. It was evil not that the sight of the man called Nim Dedzel Lad set him to thinking, and, as he relasped into silence, the subject was die action.

It was a beautiful moonlight night, and when the little party around the camp-fire had broken up, Jack prop 1 a stroll on the prairie. So Jack and Rosa, and Albayins, and Julia left the circle of wayous, and w.a. lerel d was to the river bottom near by. Adolphus was clevated to the seventh heaven of delight then, and he openly vowed that he ! ...! never enjoyed a moonlight walk as he did that one. The fair being at his si le clung to his arm so trutingly. wiff consigning herself to his protection, and he felt that if a thir z else could make him brave in time of danger, her c :: his e could. He drank in every word she uttered, and had before the walk was over he caught him olf wishing that he might live forever so near to her witching smile and thrilling voice. Also he began to think that California was no fitting place for one of her rare beauty and reliance at, and asked himself if it were ab olately necessary that say should " waste her sweetness on the des it air."

When they parted for the night, Adolphus was lere! I at the inclosure in search of Dasky Durrell. For some time he was unsuccessful, and began to won! I what he! I so me of his friend; but at the very moment he relicipated. I there are he saw the trapper standing silently in the shell wief and of the wayons. He walke I up to him, and spike. Durrell delication thave, but stool as still as the waron it off, I ming on his ride. Adolphus some lat him in a tink him at, and the he made the discovery that the trapper was graing steadily at something, as if piercing it through and the late with his head orbit. Following the course of his friends on, our hims stone in the light of a camp-fire, still smoking his pipe, and still, apparently, buried in thought. As nobody else was in range of his eyes, Nim Dedzel was certainly the person watched.

And why?

Adolphus spoke again:

" What are you looking at, Darrell?"

This time he drew a long breath, and slowly turned his head toward his interrogator.

"Lookin' at nothin'," he replied, calmly. "Cogitatin' a trifle-that's all."

Adolphus looked suspiciously from him to Nim Dedzel, and from Nim Dedzel to him, but observing that Darrell chose to conceal the truth, he forebore making further inquiries on that topic.

After some unimportant conversation, he and Darrell laid down upon the ground, rolled themselves in their blankets and consigned themselves to rest and slumber, in which nearly all of the emigrants had preceded them. Adolphus lay awake a long time, gazing up at the stars, thinking of the miniature he had coveted so much and now possessed, and persistently misconstruing the object of its owner in presenting it to him. When at last he closed his eyes, the fair Julia haunted his dreams the rest of the night.

Next morning the emigrants were astir at an early hour. When the horsemen were all in their saddles, and the wagons began to move, our hero found himself alone with the trapper.

"Darrell," said he, holding out his hand, "you said you were determined to leave this merning, and I suppose the time for saying farewell has come. I hate to say it, Darrell—hanged if I don't! It's a dem'd nuisance, that's what it is. But, you see, I have no desire to spend another season in 'he trapping regions; not to mention the fact that this party is needful of able-bodied men like me, for the protection of the female; you know. Ahem!"

"Jist put a stepper on that Chappin' apparatus of your'n, will yer?' coolly interrupted the other. "If yer thinks I'm gain' to have yer to day, yer powerful mistock, that's all.

I've come to the detarmination to travel with these emigrants fur awhile, and to freeze to 'em till I've made a diskivery. Like as not, Spider, we won't have to turn tail on one another fur several days."

Adolphus was delightfully surprised.

"What in creation has caused this change in your plans?" he asked. "You must have an important purp se in view, since, to accomplish it, you take a portion of the time belonging to your vocation."

"I'm not sartin what all that gibberish amounts to, but I reckon you ain't fur from the truth. The fact is, my s'picions have got to be confarmed, or blowed higher'n a kite."

"I don't understand."

"Wal, then, to speak plainer lingo, I'm goin' to foller these movers fur no other purpose than to keep an eye on this yer guide, Nim Dedzel!"

Adolphus had suspected this, and was not surprised.

"Why are you so suspicious of him?" he askel.

"Does he look to you like a honest man?" demanded the trapper.

"Hangnation—no! At first sight of him I thought be coked more like a cut-throat."

" Wal, he ain't nothin' shorter, I opine."

"Oh, thunder! you can't be in earnest?"

"See yer, Speler, this are not the fast time I've see'd Nim Dedzel—not by a long shot—and if you ever knowed Du by Darrell to misplace a spicion, you know more 'to tit than Darrell hi self. I spicioned that man the fast time I sot eyes on him, and I'll tell yer why. It was 'to t for your a o, 'cornin' to my recolled, and I so 'd him in friendly confide with that great chief of the Cheyennes, Terribale in I dishit near a word they said, but I knowed that never was a greater commy to the pule-says than that same Tare head. The next time I so 'd him was in a drunken row at Westport. He had gambled all his money away at a card-table, and then had drawed a bowie, and bawl don't at the top of his we conthat he'd have the life of the feller as wen his only and the the other chap fetched him a swip acres the mazzle, and the cowardly whelp slunk away like a prairie-wolf. The last time I see'd him 'fore this, war jist two year ago this month, at Fort Leavenworth. I war on my way to the trappin'-grounds, and stopped thar a day to refresh myself and When I arrove at the fort I found that an emigrantbarry of the smaller kind had halted thar. It was a party of fortune-hunters on thar way to the diggin's-all men-no Wimmen or children among 'em. And thar guide war this same Nim Dedzel. I didn't think much bout it then, but when I came down to the settlements the next summer I' found out sunkthin' that made me s'picion the cuss more'n ever. The party I met at Fort Leavenworth had got as fur as the Rocky Mountains when they war 'tacked by Crow Injuns. Every man was butchered 'cept Dedzel, and how he give the red devils the slip nobody knows to this day. He come trottin' back by hisself, tellin' a big story 'bout the massakree, and then he lounged bout the forts and settlements for more'n a month, drinkin' whisky and spendin' money like dirt, and it struck this beaver as how he didn't come by his money honest."

"Good Lord!" cried Adolphus, who had begun to grow a little pale as the trapper approached the close of his speech. "You certainly can not mean to intimate that the fellow led that party of gold-seekers into danger purposely? You can not mean that?"

"Can't I?" coolly responded the trapper. "Maybe not, but hyur's as den't hold Nim Dedzel above the deed."

"You don't say? Thunderation! Who knows but that the secundrel will lead us into some outlandish place, and let the red-skins clip off our scalps one by one? Oh, blazes! it's too horrible to contemplate. I say, Darrell, don't you think it would be best, on second thought, to go off on your trappling excursion without delay, instead of forcing yourself upon the hospitality of these emigrants. If you would come to that conclusion, maybe I could be persuaded to accompany 162, and spend the season in your mountain home."

"Wagh! don't be a baby, Spider. If you're afcard to 137-"

" 1/will? Ha! ha! ha! Me afraid? The idea! Why my word, you certainly forget to whom you are speaking."

"It's jist likely," continued the trapper, "that this yer guide means mischief. I'll sw'ar he's a friend of the Cheyennes—I s'picion he's got the good will of the Crows—an I smash me if I'd stake much that he am't on good terms with the color in gineral. I'm goin' to keep the cuss under my twinklers till I l'arn his intentions, and then if his plans den't promise safety to these people we must try to nip 'em in the Joud. Hyur's what considers his elf a match fur Nim Delzel, every day in the week."

" And here's another," said Adolphus, pompously.

Here the conversation was interrupted by the approach of Jack Weller, and as Darrell desired to let none of the emigrants know of his suspicion at present, he communicated as much to Adolphus by a sign.

The trapper then galloped forward and joined the guide, with whom he was seen to enter into convenation in a free and pleasant manner. Adolphus and Jack rode side by side, sometimes in front of the train, sometimes behind, and often swerving to one side. They conversed on various topics, of course, but Adolphus never liked so well to hear his friend talk as when as was speaking of his sister, and, to "draw him out," he frequently resorted to the artifice of praising the gipsy-like beauty of little Rosa Brown.

Thus the day passed.

At sunset they went into camp, just as they had done on the preceding evening, and in the same manner practiced every night since their departure from the settlements. Once more supper was cooked and eaten, and once more cur hero found more enjoyment in his position close to the fair Jalla than he did in the discussion of the meal. Then came another moonlight stroll on the prairie, by the young folks, while the older ones, especially the men—though including several women—resigned themselves to the coothing influence of their pipes. Night deepened. Strolling and stacking were an agiven up, and one by one the entire party retired to rest. No guards were appointed, the guide assuring them that it he had himself need remain awake, since an attack from Indians was not to be thought of that night.

Dusky Darrell spread his blanket on the ground, within a dozen yards of the spot where the guide had taken his still, and stretched himself upon it as if he were very tired and thepy. On one side of the inclosure a gap had been left between two wagons, looking out upon the prairie toward the West. In this opening Nim Dedzel had stationed himself, to watch over the sleeping emigrants. Here he walked slowly backward and forward, now in the shadows and now in the full light of the moon, keeping a sharp look-out for danger, and ostensibly as faithful as he could be to the responsibility Le bore. The hours slipped by, and he did not leave his post, but kept up as sharp and unremitting a watch as he could have done were it absolutely necessary, which he himself had declared it was not. Shortly after midnight, however, when everybody but himself seemed locked in slumber, there was a change in his movements which would certainly have attract ed attention, and canced surprise, had there been any one awake to see him. First he paused and stood still for some minutes, gazing keenly around. Then, dropping to a stooping posture, he moved away from the opening, and began to glid; through the shadows of the wagons, stopping at every Wag in as if listening, and then moving stealthily on. In this termy r he went completely round the circle, and paused at his starting-point.

After that the guide remained stationary for a short time. Then, as if struck by a new thought, he walked straight to the jot where Dusky Darrel was lying wrapped in his blanket. Bending low over the silent form of the trapper, he gazed weekingly at his face, and listened to his deep, regular breathing. Seeming satisfied with what he saw and heard, he resumed his upright position, and muttered to himself:

"Sound a leep. Nothin' to be feared from him. If he don't 'pect any thing nobody does; tharfore, I'll jist consider may alf safe. Buh! of Dusky Darrell goes to findin' out more'n he ought to know, I'll show him some night how a few inches of t impered steel kin silence a man. He! he! he!"

With this, the fellow turnel on his heel and walked away. Once more he stood stock-still in the gap, casting hurried glance, about him for a minute or two, as if to make sure that he was not watched. Then, in a crouching attitude, he hally left his post and glided out upon the open prairie, leaving the camp to take care of itself.

No sooner had he taken this sudden flight from the encampment, than Dusky Darrell slowly raised his head and looked after him. Then, with the stealth of a cut, he rose to his feet, wrapped his blanket around him and crept to the opening. The next moment he had left the inclosure—left the sleeping camp—and was following in the footsteps of the guide.

CHAPTER V.

THE SPIES ON DUTY.

DARRELL had been feigning sleep for the purpose of watching Nim Dedzel. Having observed that that person was particularly desirous that none but himself should remain awake, it became at once a settled point in the trapper's mind that something was to be done during the night, which the deer thereof deemed advisable to enact without the knowledge of his employers. And, with this conclusion, he had resolved to be a spy upon Dedzel's actions.

When he saw Dedzel leave the camp, he did not hesting an instant about following. He determined that if any thing was done he would be a witness to it. Once upon the open prairie, in the full, bright light of the meen, he saw the guide some distance ahead, moving swiftly on, as if in a great hurry to have the affair over. Fearful that the man well look back and discover him, he stooped till his heal was almost on a level with his knees, and then darted forward reiselessly but holdly, on the track of the districted party.

It is not in a subject move because the contract of the contra

It soon became obvious that Dedzel's destination was a grove of oak trees about a mile from the camp. This grove resembled an island on the ocean, as it rested like a dark blotch on the bosom of the broad, level plain, and by the tame of islands such groves are frequently called by prairie men. Darrell could not but wonder what his errand to such a place could be, and he was determined to find out if he could do so by keeping the object of his suspicion in sight. Twice he was compelled to throw himself on the ground, to escape the keen eyes of Dedzel as they shot backward, and both times his wonderful quickness saved him from discovery.

They soon neared the grove. Dedzel slackened his pace as he entered the shadows of the trees, and his pursuer did the same. A few more steps and Dedzel disappeared. The trapper did not wait an instant then, but darted forward like a flash, and in another moment he, too, was under cover of the darkness that pervaded the patch of timber. Here he I visual, and hugged the trunk of a large oak tree, standing perfectly still to take breath and listen. They were both in the grove now, where the moonlight did not penetrate, and he could no longer see the guide. As he listened, however, he heard footsteps slowly receding through the wood. This showed that the guide was still moving on, and had not discovered him.

Darrell was about to follow by the sound of footsteps, when he was checked by the low neigh of a horse close at hand, and the stamp of an iron-shod hoof on the turf. Within the same minute a strange voice cried out, impatiently:

"Whoa! Stand still, you fool, or I'll larrup you till you'll have a cause for being restless!"

Somewhat astonished, Darrell stepped quickly tack and to an stood as close to the tree-trunk as possible. In this istion, resembling a part of the tree itself, he listened for an explanation of the mystery. Presently that same strange voice exclaimed:

" Hello, Delz 11 Is that, you?"

At I then came the reply, in a voice quite familiar to the listener;

"In course it's me. Didn't s'pose 'twas any hody else, did you?"

&quot;No; I'm glad you come."

- "Bah! yer didn't think I'd furgit? That ain't Nim Dedzel's style. I knowed this was the fust place of meetin' and yer I am, and yer you are, and we'd better be quick about it."
  - " Well, has any suspicion been placed upon me?"
  - " Not any. Thar was at fust, but I settled that."
- "Good! I shall come in sight every day, and if any thing extraordinary happens you can communicate to me."
  - "That'll do."
  - " It will be a pretty good haul, I suppose?"
  - "Devilish good."
  - "How much ?"
  - "Three thousand in gold and silver."
  - " So much ?"
  - " No less."

A prolonged whistle of surprise.

- "It will be well worth our trouble, then?"
- "That's my calculation."
- "Well, I have a strong body under my command."
- " Have, hey? When shall the thing take place."
- " " In about three weeks."
  - "Whar?"
- "In Bloody Hollow, on the banks of Devil's Creek. Ha! ha! I gues you know where that is, since these names originated with you.": ""
- "Wal, I reckon that's the proper place for't. Den't fail. See' yer comes up to the scratch, whatever happens."

.. "Trust me for that."...

And there the conversation ended.

Immediately following the last words the stranger was heard to chirrup sharply to his horse, and then there was a crashing of brushwood as the animal moved away. Before that noise ceased to be heard, Nim Dedzel brushed by the trapper so close that their garments nearly touched. Watching him like a scrpent, Darrell saw him heave the grove and hurry across the open prairie toward the camp. Then Durrell wrapped his blanket tightly around him, crosseed so low that he was almost concealed by the grass, and durted after the guide.

Thus they both returned to camp. When they reached the wagons the guide resumed his post in the entrance to the Inclosure, filled his pipe and lit it, as if he had no intention of closing his eyes that night. Darrell made a detour, by Worming himself through the grass, and crawled under a Wagon, with all the stealth he could command. He regained Lis position undiscovered, and once more laid down to rest But there was no sleep for him now. His mind was so oc Capied with what had just transpired that sleep was entirely out of the question. His thoughts were full of what he and heard. Every word of that strange dialogue passed again through his mind, in regular procession Didzel's remark about three thousand in gold and silver being a good haul, caused him no little anxiety, for that very day he remembered to have heard one of the emigrants obstrve that there was about that amount of hard money in the party, and he could not rid himself of the belief that it Was this money Deczel had alluded to. During all the hours that intervened between that time and dawn, he lay there and thought of it. By watching the guide, he had seen and heard more than he had expected to see and hear, and the result was that his suspicions were in a measure confirmed. There no longer existed a doubt in his mind that Nim Dedzel was a villain and a traitor.

When morning broke, and the party began to stir about, making the usual preparations for another day's journey, Darrell left his sleepless resting-place and began to do the same. But he was unusually silent and grave, and more than once as he moved about he shot a threatening glance at the guide from his piercing orbs. He did not deem it advisable to tell the locate what had transpired while they slumbered, excepting the plans, to whom he related the whole circumstance just has it occurred. Adolphus was considerably alarmed, and confidered they could not do better than to let the emicrants know all about it, so that the fellow could be discharged at once. But Darrell said they would keep their own counsel, and wait.

"One third on 'em wouldn't believe it," said he, "if I should tell 'em. They all have faith in him, appearently, at I if I war to open my head they mought think I's the one as had deviltry in my noddle. I'll let the matter rest audile, and keep my twinklers open in the meanwhile, and if I kin git a chance to prove the fellow's treachery, in time to save that lives, hyur's what'll do his duradest."

"You really think he meditates mi-thief to this party?"

"1 does."

That afternoon the mysterious rider who had been degging the wagon-train, once more made his appearator. The emigrants called him the Wild Horsenan, and none of them seemed to experience the slightest uncasiness at his coming. but were rather amused as they watched his in-the actions. This time he came from the south, and approached at a steady canter. For a long time he kept this emise, but at length, when within less than a mile of the vagous, he salldealy changed to another direction. Governed by a single movement of the hand that held the reins, the large, handsome herse swerved to one side with a graceful demi-velt, and began to perform a circle round the way in. Every one watched the unknown riler with more or less interest, as he began to sweep round them, with his larg buir and mantle flapping unhecded in the wind. At one time he would throw himself back in the saddle and wave his arms wildly in the air; at another, he would rive in the stirr ; s, lean forward and urge the fleet-footed animal to its lost speed, as if a legion of devils was in het pursuit. In this manner he completed the circle, and then with a shrill, L. Liacal cry, and a parting wave of the hand, he cantered his rely away in a southerly direction, toward the point from which he had come.

"That chap's crazy as a loon," said the guille to Durell, when the rider had disappeared in the distance.

"Think so?" was the short response.

" Don't think nothin' 'bout it. I brow it."

"That's room for more'n one opinion that," said Dar il, significantly, and, without stopping to a te the client of all words, he turned away, and joined Adolphus and Join.

It is not worth while to particularise every day and every incident of that tedious journey across the plain. Day after day, and week after week passed away, and nothing worthy of record occurred to vary the weary menotray. Dasky Darrell occupied much of his time in thinking of what had transpired in the grove, and after that Nim Dedzel was watched like a hawk, morning, noon, and night, Adolphus often relieving his friend when nature demanded iest for the latter. He secretly resolved that he would never leave the party until satisfied that nothing more was to be apprehended from the cunning villainy of the guide. Darrell's anxiety caused A leli hus much uneasiness, and it might have kept him in Constant terror if he had been free to give the matter a thorough turning over in his mind. But the greater part of the time his thoughts were of something else, and when riding Usi le one of the Weller wagons, in pleasant conversation with a sweet voice inside, where a small white hand held off the screening canvas, and a pair of brilliant dark eyes looked into his-then all recollection of fear and Indians fled, leavit y him careless of everything but the present. The exqui-Sie I ail a great deal of attention to his personal appearance, Low, taking pains to keep his clothes in a neat condition and highly perfumed. Warned by a former neglect, he had not forg ten his razor when he left home, and he shaved him-"If now every twenty-four hours, without fail, combed his flowing check-whiskers and trained his moustaches with wax, uttil a very captivating twist at the ends became natural to them. Poor fellow! As time passed he gradually awoke to the fact that he had already met his fate. He was in I ve. And the object of his love was sweet Julia Weller. Could be ever win her? That was now the all-absorbing que tion.

The Wild Horseman made his appearance nearly every day. Semetimes he described a circle round them, riding with the speed of the wind; at other times he merely crossed. I ir path, in front or belond; but invariably he executed his entire pantominal performance, to the amusement of his facellier sudience. His actions were in lubitably the e of a backling such he was regarded, almost without an explain. Sometimes it was thought that Darky Daried had his darkts on that point, but the trapper was as inaccessible as an overcross the subject.

Ore evening more than three weeks after the memorable night on which Darrell had been a witness to the suspicions actions of Nim Delzel, the wagon train was once more component was formed after the usual fashion, and by ten o'clock every body was asleep, with the single exception of Adolphus Perkins. Darrell had whispered to him just before dark, charging him to remain awake and keep watch, while he himself caught a little sleep for the restoration of exhausted nature. The trapper also gave orders that he should be instantly awakened if any thing extraordinary co-curred, and was promised obedience. So this was the reason that Adolphus was awake when the rest were locked in slumber. The moon, which three weeks are was in its full. Ind fallen so far behind the nights that it was no larger visible; but the sky was coar, and the stars were out in all their mark-line splender.

their sparkling splendor.

Our hero had much to think of to keep himself from sinking into the inviting embrace of Morpheus. He th aght of Julia, and wondered if she were dreaming of him. He then hit of Jack Weller, and wondered if he were dreaming of Res Brown. He thought of Roan Brown, and wendered if she vere dreaming of Jack. He thought of a the card things, and, at last, when every other subject for rellation was exhausted, he remembered, with a start, that he bed been charged to watch Nim Dedzel! He was lying on his blanket, so as to appear asleep, and the thought hal no so ter struck him than he turned his head to look at the man. What was his surprise and consternation, when he made the discovery that Nim Dedzel had disappeared, and has he where to be seen? He started up to a siving policie and gazed about the camp. But without result. He don't a scarching glance at every one who, like hin lf. rej - 1 . the open air. Still to no effect. Immeliately after the et igrants retired, he had seen the guile strien has sif u, 1 the ground, close to the gap in the circle of waters, and with Lis buffalo robe around him, as if with the intention of his mare mere wetil morning. He had watched har there as dir et l, until fully sati fied that he was telep, and now no mi hief, and then the watch r permitted his time to drift into other channels, which care i him to fire the day cutirciy.

Now the guide was gone-was a where in sight. White.

Question. If he had seen him go, he might have followed, or awakened the trapper and put him on the trail.

"Confound it," he growled, "I should like to know where the deuce the slippery fellow has gone? Why couldn't he stay here and behave himself? No good will come of his un gentlemanly conduct. I'm positive of that. Oh, Lord!"

The exclamation with which Adolphus concluded his so lillquy, was uttered in a husky, frightened whisper.

He turned pale. His eyes started half out of their socke's and fastened themselves upon some object with a scared look The object in question was nothing more nor less than a human figure. It was crawling under a wagon-crawling slowly and softly, as if intent upon entering the camp unscenand coming directly toward him! It was but a little disthree away -under the nearest wagon - and unless it changed Its c arse, would seen be on the spot where he was sitting. For a moment Adolphus stared at the figure, and then, almost breathless with terror, he lay down and covered his head with his blanket. In this position, breathing hu kily and short, his heart throbbling wildly and fast, he silently awaited his f.t. He fully believed the intruder was coming to kill him, at I be well-nigh smothered himself with his blanket, with a Vague feeling that there was hope in such a concealment. He Land the stranger coming, slowly, smalthily-heard him or while close to his head-heard him pas-and then the was still. This surprised Perkins. The intruder had un loubtedly passed on without noticing him. For some moments Le lay still, thinking it too good is be true; then with a determination to be bold, he ventured the throw asile the blanket and miss his head.

As he did this, the first thing he saw was the very firme that had startly him so. It was not on all-fours now, but startly ling erect. He could see the outline of the form, and a firm of Hereulean mold it was—tall, muscular, massive. At its fort, something lying silently on the ground attracted his hotion. This semething was the prestrate hely of a man, "Vilently uncenscious in slumber. Adolphus gave a tremental start, and half-rese to his feet. He remembered who the sheeping man was; it was no other than Dusky Darrell.

The intruder was standing over him, apparently looking down upon his upturned face. Gol of heaven! what was it that he saw? A knife glittering in the stranger's hand! Horror! He was going to murder the trapper as he slept!

This was too much for Adolphus. With a yell that might have done justice to a half-dozen throats, he sprung to his feet.

"Help! Murder! Fire!" he shricked. "Fire! Murder! Help! Wake up, Darrell, if you don't want to be kille!! Hangnation! Blood and thunder! Help! Nizger in the pit! Oh-oh-oh! Put him out! Roll up, tumble up-H-e-l-p!

The noise was almost sufficient to wake the Seven Sleepors. Darrell jumped up as if he were strick, and confront it his would-be assassin. The latter stagment back, hurled his knife to the ground, and turned his blazing eyes up in Adolphus. Then was made the startling discovery that the milnight prowler was not a stranger, as had been supposed, but Nim Dedzel, the guide!

Then there was a slight commotion in camp. Quite a number of people were awakened by the vocifer as cries of Adolphus, and while some merely looked cut of the wagons and inquired the cause of the disturbance, others rusted excitedly to the spot, and surrounded the three men with a clamor of interrogations.

As soon as Perkins could speak intelligibly, he explired briefly that the guide had been sneaking about with a kalfe in his hand, and that he was on the point of stable at Darr II, when he had seen preper to interrupt the near lever by stoating to the trapper. Delzel, with his arms follower his broad chest, looked at the speaker with a smill of a nimer. and said:

"I s'pe e you all b'lieve what he says. He's he's he's The feller's been dreamin', I take it, or embe's a bland coward."

"Oh, what a lie!" returne! Perkins. "I first saw y a under that waron. You were on your banks at I have, crawling toward me. You pass don'to Durrell. You were at at to stab him when I raised my voice."

Adolphus was terribly excited; Dedzel was end

"I was jist walkin' around," said the latter, addressing the crowd. "I was passin' this spot when that spindle-shanked cuss jumped up and begun to squawk like a skeered pappoose."

"Demnition I you're an awful liar. Why, here's the very buite which you had raised over my friend."

And as he spoke, Adolphus stooped and picked up the

"That sticker don't belong to me," said the guide, coolly.

"Here's mine, in my belt."

Dusky Darrell looked at the weapon, and instantly declared that it was his property. Then a loud laugh was raised at our hero's expense.

"I don't care a straw!" yelled the exasperated fellow.

"He took it out of Darrell's belt-that's what he did."

"Don't say any more, Spider," whispered the trapper, close to his ear. "They won't believe you now, if you blow all night."

The crowd dispersed, with many jokes and outbursts of laughter, and once more "turned in," all under the impression that Adolphus had been the victim of a frightful dream.

CHAPTER VI.

IN HIS OWN TRAP.

LITTLE was said the next day about Perkins' midnight adventure. Once in a while some waggish fellow would fling a joke at him for being frightened in his sleep, but no one thought of putting any weight upon the accusation made against the guide. And so it afforded little food for convertation.

During the latter part of the day, Perkins and Darrell found themselves riding alone at some distance behind the Caravan, and then the subject was discussed by them for the first time.

&quot;I say, Darrell," said the exquisite, in a troubled voice,

- 'den't you believe what I told you last night? You dilla't think I was lyin', did you, in what I said about Nim Dedzel?"
  - "I believe all that you said," was the reply.
  - " That the scoundrel was going to puncture your person?"

" Exactly."

" And that my interference prevented him from st dein'?"

" Sartin."

- "Then, why the deuce didn't you say so on the spot, and maybe they wouldn't have had the ill-manners to laugh at me as they did?"
- "Bih! that laughin' 'mounted to nothin', and beyond that was no needeessity fur me to open my mouth. That knife could never been out of my belt 'less' twar tack cut by human hands, that's said. But these chaps is fresh from the States, b'ar in mind, and green as hammered elm, and consiquently they ain't goin' to give up that faith in Nim D. Iz I till sunkthin's proved ag'in' him. But never mind; I'll ejen that eyes to-night."

" How ?"

- "No matter; I'll do it, sure's shootin'. The stranger as I heard talkin' to Green that night in the grove, said sunithin' war to happen 'bout three weeks from that time. It's been now high onto four weeks, and I've been expectin' that ar' sunkthin' fur two or three days."
  - "And you think it will occur to-night?"

"I wouldn't bet ag'in' it."

"Good gracious! maybe it'll be something drealful."

" More'n possible."

- "Maybe they'll blow us all up with gunpowder while we're asleep."
- "Hyur's what this beaver thinks. Them two pale-faces are leagued with Injuns."

" Well ?"

- "And them Injuns are sp'ilin' fur a skulp-dance, wille the whites are hankerin' arter the money as belongs to these people."
  - "Thunderation! You don't believe it, though?"

" I does."

Adolphus began to breathe hard.

"This is terrible," he said, wiping the perspiration from his brow with a perfumed handherchief. "I don't like such non lise as this, and I won't stand it! It makes a man feel cell to think about it. I tell you what we can do, though. We are under no obligations to any one here, and if we should Elile cut at ence, and leave them to take care of them elve, we might confer with our hair, you see."

He can be hing as he derived the dark month

arrial in the desired on the that I be break

"Sir, I'm a lamel of you," he said, almost severy. "I all heavely a war afeard of reds, but smash me if I didn't think you war more of a man than to talk in that style the like this. If I ain't awfully fooled, you're struck arer that purty Weller gal, but as soon as danger comes you're "illini to give her up, leave her to a horrible fate, and git. is that the sort of a man you are? If 'tis, hyur's as wants no more to do with you."

Addithus turned scarlet, and dropped his eyes with shame.

"Hug it!" he exclaimed, "it does seem d vilish cowardly in me to think of nebedy but myself. Poor Julia! Suppose sie should be killed? Gracious what a fool I am! I'm a a ... an! I'm a bag! I'm every thing! To be candid with July I me decily in love with that charming maiden !"

"You don't desarve her."

" New den't say that, Derrell; please den't! I'm not so In a coward as you think. The net really afraid of In-"..., but I den't hise them-not any. I speke thoughtiesely t mant ago; I will stay and see the fracas through. Witer ver my dear Julia is, there I shall find it a pleasure te i., though surrounded by dangers of the most appalling z.1111.12

" Now you're talkin'."

'La', see here, Darrell," continued Adolphus, stammeringi. " dan't yea think you had better warn the chiman't of . rp ... before this thing takes place? In that ca they C. I. . . . I. i. 2 and, and parhaps we would not then be

· I. .. in that the to the property is the

All i lie to the striped was dispered.

That evering they turned soids from the trail about half even Dusky Darrell admitted that. It was in a small holdow in the prairie, and through one side of it ran a small river, or creek as it was called, deep enough at that point to render fording impossible. It was an abrupt bend in this stream that had been selected for the excampment, so that when the wagons were locked together in their usual manther, and every thing was prepared for the night, the emigrants found themselves defended on three sides by impossible water.

"This," said the guide, " is Bloody Holler, and the stream runnin' through it are Devil's Crick. I give 'em them names myself, and no others would 'a' been half so 'prepriate."

"Indeed?" returned Jack Weller. "You have stopped here before, then?"

"Wal, I jist has," responded the guide, emphatically, with a covert twinkle in his snake-like orbs.

"And why did you give this the name of Bleely Hallow?"

Dedzel hesitated before replying to this inquiry, and looked as though he would like to say something if he could bet deem it prudent to do so. However, he merely remarked:

"I hain't time to tell you the story now, your ester, but afore we leave this place I'll warrant as you will be convinced that Bloody Holler is the proper name for't."

With this he walked away, chuckling slyly to himself.

Before it had grown dark, Darrell began his self-in posed task. Taking great pains that the guide should not discree his movements, and divine their import, he went to every loan separately and talked to him briefly and hurricily. In the st cases his whispered words created perceptible exemple nent; and looks of surprise, doubt, indignation and vindostiveness were freely testowed upon the unsequenting guide, while a few were observed to turn pule and shutter.

When his task was done, Darnil went to Addiging with sparkling eyes and a smile of tri maph.

"Now we'll see who wins," said he, in a low the "Troput every man on his guard, and it's my oping well have a lively time hyur to night. Some on 'on den't believe that's any cause for s'picion, but all admit that no harm kin come of bein' ready fur mergencies. I told 'em how to act. They're not to do or say any thing that will give Dedzel the hast ilee of what's goin' on. They're to go to bed to night, jist as usual, but not to sleep, and the very minute I gives the Word every one on 'em comes forth ready fur duty."

"Good!" sail Perkins, approvingly. "You've arranged Filings handsomely. But, judging from your zeal in this, you s em perfectly satisfied that the aforesaid thing will take place to-night."

"I'd e'ena'most sw'ar to it."

"Then, my friend, our opinions differ. My view of the attrir is just this: if the fellow had meditated harm to us during this halt, he would not have chosen a locality so " dendvantageous for attack."

Darrell shook his head.

"That ain't my view of the case, by a long shot. Del-Zel's object in selectin' this p'int fur a stoppin'-place are to Inil the wood over our eyes, and make us think he's awful keerful. But 'tain't often this beaver gits hoodwinked in that style. This is a good sitiwation for defense—no two Ways 'bout that-but what chance would we have to defend Girselves if a body of reds war to come down on us while We's all asleep? That's the way they intend to work the thing, and they wouldn't leave a grease spot of us if that plan 'ud sicceed. But we'll see how it turns out now."

That evening, as they are their supper and smoked their Tipes, the only change perceptible in the emigrants was their the ral shence and gravity. Nim Dedzel was obviously in a Very seed hamor, having a good-natured word for every one " net. Up n being questioned as to whether he weuld station ar is over the comp that night, he replied that such a pre-

Cartin was ab clutely unnecessity.

"However," he added, "I'll stay awake myself and see that no 'han' comes nigh. If I git sleepy toward the middle "I the no let I'll rote one of the men and let him take my 11. 6 . 2.

When the preper time arrived all "turned in," just so Detri, at las natural'y as if it were to obtain their customary rest and sie.p. In a few minutes silence brooded over the camp—silence deep and solemn—and the traveling winds paused to hover about the canvas tilts for awhile, as if warning the inmates of the approaching peril, and then, with a gentle sigh, passed on.

No one seemed awake except Nim Delzel. He recht is on the soft grass near the entrance to the inclosure, quietly smoking his pipe, and looking complacently about him at the score of heavy wagons forming a semicircle on the riverbank. There was something more than complacency, there was exultation in his look—a greedy anticipation of trium; hand a golden harvest. He gazed at the silent caravan as though it were in his power, and he was already free to runninge it from one end to the other.

About two nours after the last man had retired, the guide ceased smooting, put his pipe out of sight, and cautiously rese from his recumbent position. He then drew his cap down to his very eyes, tightened his belt, took up his rifle, cest a last scarching look over the encampment, and darted through the opening as noiselessly as a scrpent. He was gone, leaving the camp unguarded.

As soon as he was out of sight, a figure rese silently from the ground where it had been lying as motionles as the ground itself. It was the figure of Dusky Durrell. He had been folgoing sleep skillfully enough to decrive the most acute observer, but his watchful eyes had scarcely left the recording form of the guide. Now he glided to the opening and looked out. Dedzel was hurrying away, and fast disappearing in the darkness.

"Go on, you varmint," growled the trapper, as he turn I away. "Go on, and bring yer copper-skinned crew to lift our hair, if that's yer game; but smash me if yer doesn't fird us ready to receive you. It'll be a complete su'prise, sarting but the su'prise'll all be on t'other side."

With this he began to arouse the camp. It may an to wagon he went, lifting the cover of every one society, and addressing a few words to its immates in a low tent. When this was done he passed among these lying on the ground, and gave them the word. Several had fatten aske p as they waited, but they were easily awakened by the low, penetrating voice of the trapper

In a few minutes the area was swarming with dark figures. Form n with blanched faces huddled together on the bank of the stream, straining their children to their besoms, and raintears upon their helpless heads. Poor mothers I they hew not how soon their little darlings would be torn from Livir arms, and butchered before their eyes. Men hurried to and fro, excitedly but in silence, some looking to the priming "I tavir guns, others filling their powder-flasks and bulletl .c., es, while a few, who had no preparations to make, took tais opportunity of comforting their wives and children. No ale seemed to entertain a doubt, now, that the guide was a trains, and that he was about to show them convincing Ir of his treachery. Else, why had he stolen away, like a thief, at that hour of the night? A number of them had seen him go, and were positive that his departure was prethe litat d. They now looked upon Dusky Darrell as their lea ler, and they awaited his commands. He gave them with the coolness and clear judgment of an old General, accepting Lis position without a word, knowing that he was the mo-to competent person in the party to fill it.

There were thirty two men of the defenders, the greater timber of whom were brave and self-confident, while a few, who otherwise would have held back, felt themselves endered with courage by a single thought of the dear ones under their protection. Darrell spoke cheerfully and hopefully. The attacking party, he said, could approach only from one quarter, and, unless the party was much larger than lessure et all twould be, they, with the wagons for fortifications, would undealtedly have the advantage. The men were so the all at regular intervals along the line of wagons, all runs heavily charged and freshly primed. It was decided that, when Darrell give the order, one-half of them should be effect of the first was noted, and the second command given. After that they were to load and fire as rapidly as the little of the first was noted, and the second command given. After that they were to load and fire as rapidly as without further orders.

When all preparations were finished, the trapper went out to ... if the few was coming.

In a few manutes he came hurrying back, and bounded into

- "What is it?" inquired Adolphus, who knew in an instant that his friend had made a discovery.
  - "They're comin'," swas the brief reply.
  - " Who's coming ?"
  - "Injuns!"

The excitement was intense now. There had been secret hopes that that they would not be attacked that night, but the trapper's words dashed every hope, and warned the emigrants that they must fight or die. There was a compressing of lips, a flashing of eyes, a steadying of nerves, and in a moment every heart seemed steeled, and every face wore a look of dogged determination. Anxious glances were shot at the group of women and children, but the anxiety in them was hidden as much as possible. These were brave souls which resolved then and there that no violent hands should touch the helpless ones looking to them for protection, until their own bodies were trampled under foot.

The trapper said he had not been able to determine the number of their enemies, precisely, but he significantly added that the band was not a smaller one than "he'd looked for."

"They war comin' slow when I see'd 'cm," he continued, "so as to git as clus' to the camp as possible 'thout wakin' us up. I war jist near 'nough to see as they was hessman, but I'm sartin they're reds. They'll be onto us 'fore long. Hist! Look!"

Every tongue was silent, and every eye and cur on the alert.

While speaking, the quick-sighted trapper detected a form —a single form, dim and shadowy, but evidently that of a man—out upon the prairie, at a little distance from the component. It was in motion; that was obvide at first sight. A second look showed that it was approaching—and approaching with the bold, free step, and cool as armost of one who feels no cause for fear. Darrell ordered every end to lie close to the ground and maintain a strict silence. The order was promptly obeyed; even the children gave vent to no sound, except that occasioned by their husky breathing; and the stillness of the grave broaded over the camp.

The lone individual came steadily on, until within a few Far is of the wagons. Then he stopped, and inclined his held as if listening. He spent about a minute in this attitie, when, seeming satisfied that all was well, he put his injers to his mouth and gave vent to a soft, tremulous whiste. It was a singular sort of a whistle, low but penetrating, such as may be heard—especially on an open prairie, in the deal of hight—fully as well at the distance of a half-mile as at a dozen feet.

But he had no sooner given the signal, than he was seized by a pair of strong hands and hurled violently to the earth! Sinewy fingers clutched his throat—a rough palm was pressed tigatly over his mouth, until a gag was slipped between his terth—and in this manner, unable to utter a sound, he was dranged into the inclosure a helpless prisoner.

It was Dusky Darrell who had captured the prowler.

CHAPTER VII.

THE HOUR OF PERIL.

"Bn still, you wolf-cub!" commanded Darrell, as he threw his prisoner on the ground, among the astonished emigrants, and placed one heavy foot upon his breast. "Be still, or I'll stursh yer pictur' in the flirt of a skunk's tail, you devil's imp!"

"Who is he?" askel Adolphus; and several others reiterated the question.

"Who is he?" repeated the trapper. "Jist take a squint; at him, and I'll sw'ar you won't ax ag'in. Yer know him as Well as I."

hat over the prostrate man, hastily scrutinized his face, and the sarted back with various expressions of surprise.

" N. Dekel!" exclaimed a dezen in a breath.

"Yes, it's Nim Delzel," coolly remarked Darrell.

"Why, I thought it was an Indian," said Mr. Weller.

"Wagh! he's worse nor an Injun, or I'd anoch under."

"I think you are too hasty, my friend," said a lank individual, stepping forth with an important air. "What right had you to capture this gentleman, and gag him in this crack manner? He had simply strolled away a short distance, and was returning. What can you prove against him?"

"Were not his actions calculated to excite suspicion!" are swered Jack Weller. "Did he not stop outside and whistle in a manner that showed plainly he was signaling to some body? The result of that signal is yet to be seen, and in all likelihood-"

"The result of that 'ar signal may be seen n "c," interrupted Darrell. "Look out yender, if yer wants to see it."

He was pointing toward the prairie.

All eyes were turned in that direction, and a black, shapeless mass was seen moving slowly across the plain, like a storm-cloud low down in the horizon. It was just discersable to the naked eye, and what it was composed of could not be determined. Every one instinctively green to the truth however, and was prepared to hear the whispered disclaration of Darrell:

"That 'ar's the attackin' party, sure's shootin', and it's b'arin' down on us, too. Don't make any more noise than you kin. Hyur, two or three of you fellers help me the this cuss's hands and feet, and the chap as takes that any out of his mouth will git one put in his'n. Yer mouth as well b'ar that in mind, kumrid," he added, addre sing the has individual who had objected to the treatment my sellup a the guide.

Dedzel was bound securely, hard and foot. He leded the flerce hatred, disappointment and fear he could not express in words, and was tauntingly laughed at by his capture. They threw him out of their way, in a manner in recapilities than gentle, and left him lying on the bank of the creek, where he amused himself by trying to push the graffrom his mouth with his tongue.

In another minute every man was at his part, raily is action, and every mother, with her little ones guilt relational her, awaited the onset with silent dread. Many eyes, that ing like fire in the gloom, were fastened upon the data mass

Was red or white, it was certainly stealing upon them with

i. vile designs.

Presently, as if silence and stealth were no longer deemed bees ary, the cloud suddenly broke and spread out on either sile, as if a shell had bursted in the center of it. In an important the plain was covered with flying horsemen, while from fifty savage threats burst a yell, wild and hideous, evidently in held to paralyze the whites as it aroused them from their shunders. Every one knew that cry. It was the war-whoop of the Indians. And there was one in the party, at least—I) they I) rrell—who knew, from that cry, that the assailants was Chevennes.

But there was no time to think about it now. The dusky that was close at hand, swooping down upon them like a full us tornado that carries every thing before it, the contained yells making the welkin ring, and the horses' hoofs trathipling the turf with the noise of thunder.

All at once the clear, stentorian voice of Dusky Darrell rung out:

"On the right, thar! Steady -fire!"

A short of thame this had out in the darkness, like a glare of lightning—there was a crash equal to the report of a cantary and sixteen rilles were emptied in the face of the fee.

Then there was dire confusion among the Indians. The explant battle-cry was changed to howls of pain, raze and displication. There was a tunultuous pounding of horfs; frictioned steels became ungovernable, and dashed made hoter and thither, while a number of ritialess ones went the rie racress the prairie with territies pied. Death shricks, the rie racress the prairie with there is made and hearse that of many minuted with there is made and hearse the of many r; and more than one of the defenders functed they havely several times, the voice of a white man rising the radiosection of the savares.

In a nilling the enemy had relified, and once more, with Tuen came Dermil's recond command, firm and distinct:

" Now-you on the left-fire."

The remaining sixteen ritles, reserved for this memers were discharged with deadly effect, and again there was destruction and confusion among the Cheyennes. By this time many of those who had fired the first volley had released their pieces, and now they began to shoot as rapidly as they could load and unload.

The Indians were furious with surprise and rage, and terrible din was created. Being now close upon the wares they fired a number random shots, though it is scarcely posser ble that they saw the persons shot at. There was a plant ing and snorting of maddened horses—a thun bring of L on the ground-unearthly screaming, greating at ! yelllarcheer upon cheer from the whites, and a regid cracking of ritles. One savage, goaded to madness by the frastration of their plans, and finding himself undorsed, gave a ferfall screech and bounded recklessly into the inchaure. In the very midst of his enemies he paused, with toned wak in her !. and glared about on the faces of the travelers, as if in arking each and every one separately for the grave. But before he could deal a blow, a strong hand had him by the threat, at ! Dusky Darrell's knife was plunged into his brack three of four times in rapid succession. Then the same pair of hands instead of letting the body fall, scized it by the in him is, in it ged it to the bank of the stream and hurled it ruthledy into the dark waters, where it sunk to a resting-; here among the fisher.

This was the last scene of the conflict. In a moment of ter the downfall of the during wretch, the sava as cuts in the inclosure left off thing, and with one last we do it yell dished away as fast as their frightened animals could carry them. Then the cloud lifted from the faces of the whites, and do posighs of relief were drawn. For some minutes the record number of them stood still, listening to the retreating to factors, until they died away in the different. Another research a long, lusty cheer, from many lasty pair of large, fell and by a chorus of thankgiving to God for the received distinct ance. The danger was over—the as along that in a panic—and the grateful emigrants were saved.

Of course all of them did not come out of the struggle un-

Scathed. There were three who were not so fortunate as the test One of these was a minister of the gospel, a young man I six and twenty, quiet, pleasant and unassuming, who had in'r cently received his diploma, and whose intention had n to exercise the ministerial functions among the numer-'as classes of people to be found in the gold regions of Cali-I mile That very morning he had astonished his fellowtravelers by calmly remarking, that he should never complete in jarney across the plains-that it was not the will of If wen he should. It was all he had said, but that he had a presentiment of his dissolution was understood. In the inning of the fray a bullet from the enemy had pierced 1.3 train, killing him instantly. The second unfortunate " a deaf and dumb man, of whom very little was known, Cont that he was always o'dm, unobtrusive, and courted Eliter He was, also, shot early in the fight, receiving a fiel wound, and breathed his last a minute or two after the I'rest of the Cheyennes. Luckily these two men had no 1. Lives in the party left unprotected by their death, but all 'les. I faces as they beil the bodies side by side, washed the blood from their wounds and covered them temporarily With canvas. The third person who felt the blow dealt that Light, was a man who had a family in his care. But he was "Ly hart. A rifle-ball had entered his arm in the vicinity The chow, and come out at the extremity of his shoulder. As he k would have it, there was an experienced surgeon in the party, who examined the wound and assured the man that, with proper treatment, the arm could be save l.

The reg was now removed from Nim Dedzel's mouth, whils dusty allies were far by youd the reach of his voice, but as p was deemed too much trouble at present to guard it, the cop's were allowed to remain upon his and has an impact. No one can obscribe the elegrin he felt at the frustice a of his lari mous seleme, and the disc very of his own has a constant himself in the good-will of the emi rants, by the resulting a story each ded to prove his innocence. But the stan his a ditors, which to exasperate him that he quickly charter his a ditors, which to exasperate him that he quickly charter him this tone, invoking curses on the heads of all present, and swearing again and again that they should yet suffer before their destination was reached. Darrell quieted him at length, with drawn knife, that he should suffer before the expiration of a minute, if he dared to utter another word. The villain relapsed into silence on the strength of this information, and was left to the unpleasant companionship of his thoughts.

The fight took place shortly after midnight. About an hour after it ended, some one made the discovery that one of the party was missing. That one was no other than Adelphus Perkins. He had not been seen since the fight, and not one could tell what had become of him. He was gene-niing—and had left no trace by which his whereabouts could be determined. Jack Weller testified, that when the approxiof the attacking party had flist been discovered, he and Adalphus had taken their positions side by side, but inche l'ately after the first volley had been fired he had disappeared. Julia Weller then remembered, that while she and Rosa Brewn were standing on the bank of the stream, locked in each other's arms. Perkins had rushed by them with a smoking gan in his hand, and had shouted good-by to them as he parel. They had supposed he was justing, however, and had not entertained a suspicion that he was really having. Further investigations were made, and it was discovered that his hard was also gone, which was refutatory to the general equal a that the missing man had been shot while standing a ar the creek, and had fallen into the water. It was now committee ly conceded, that after firing one shot at the exemy, he bel mounted his horse and fled. His reason for doing this was still a matter of speculation. Few could think for a main at that his flight had been instigated by fear. Any nan, they thought-coward or not-would hardly to so unperincity short-sighted as to attempt e-cape by dealing enter a toprairie, when he was a thousan! times safer wathin the incloure. Dusky Darrell was sil n'. He le ew Allins Proknalatt rahan any one clea in the party, and, at all he Was wile enough to keep his own course, he was seen ly assured that nothing but cowardies but taken his your fright away. And he was troubled in companie there f At tirst he had felt nothing but verstor, that the time! falls v had failed to stand his ground, but further meditation brought him no little anxiety concerning the fate of the missing man.

Despite his natural contempt for timorous men, the trapler could not deny that he had grown much attached to Adolphus, and his great uneasiness on this occasion arose from a feeling that the young man had been killed or captured by the Indians in his mad flight. There was no probability that he had escaped them entirely.

But there was no time at present to institute a search for the straggler, nor even for much reflection on the subject. Notwithstanding this, the trapper could not get it off his taird. There was room for hope that Adolphus was still the, and there was no rest for him until that hope was Cher realized or extinguished.

So, unwilling to wait till the light of day should favor him; Les stole away from his companions, and went out among the by lie of the slain Cheyennes to look for that of our hero, i raying, nevertheless, that it could not be found there. Light was moonless, as we have previously observed, yet not En durk but that objects could be seen at quite a distance. He Street no light; the extent of his scarch required none. It To die be the easiest thing in the world to distinguish a white han irom a red one, on a night such as that, without a light, if with a distinguishment was to be made. He found a Fait or of bodies strewn over the plain, silent in death, showit; they had created sal havor among the Indians. One For writen was still alive, and groaning. Darrell effered han water from his canteen, but with characteristic re-In mance to receiving favors from an enemy, he dislainfully The trapper passed on, with his conscience at rest, though be celled not help thinking that it would be a wellmerited reward if the Indian's irrational pride should be the Walls moving slowly about, the trapper's mind was sudding direct defer in the search by the sight of semething he had not before seen. It was a borse, standing directly in front of hard, distinctly ordined against the distant sky. With his eyes bent upon the ground, he had not seen it until within a few yards of where it stod. The animal mode no noise whatever, but maintained a selemn silence, as if he were standing guard over the corpses lying around him. It could be seen that a saddle was on his back. This led the trapper to believe that it was not the property of an India, but that of a white man. In all probability it was Adding Perkins' horse, and that unfortunate individual was lying on the ground, dead. It was a horrible thought, and Darren was on the eve of moving forward to investigate, when his present the ground at the voice of a man—a low, guarded voice, evidently proceeding from a dark, crouching form on the ground at the horse's feet.

"Hello, Dedzel! Is that you?"

Darrell gave a tremendous start, and then stood perfectly still, calm and collected in an instant. It was not the surprise of being unexpectedly addressed that caused him to start, but the fact that the voice and the words were familiar to him. On that memorable night, when he had followed Nim Dedzel to the oak grove, and had heard the significant colloquy between him and the unseen stranger—then and there it was he had heard that same question, uttered in a voice so closely resembling this one, that he could cany conclude they belonged to one and the same person. While such thoughts were thishing through his mind, he still guzing silently at the crouching figure before him.

"It is you, Dedzel?" asked the stranger again.

The trapper did not hesitate longer. His mind was made up the next second, and he grafily replied:

" Sartinly it's me. Who are you?"

"Bah! you know me?-Back Zigler?"

"No! 'tain't Buck?".

. " Isn't it? Ha! ha! ha!" . .

1 "Sh! not so load -- they'll hear you from the caup. Defthers! what you doin' hyur? Ain't hart, be you?

"Lord, no. Went away with the Casyones; care had alone, to see whether you of through safe or not such a Denzel, I don't understand it at all. However, you such an awkward mistake?"

Wal, I did make how the lifet blacker of my lie, that's sertio, but I'm powerful glad his no was."

" How did it happen?"

"Jist in this yer way. You see I the will they was all asleep, every mother's son on 'em, but I hope I may be shot if they warn't shammin', and jist as wide awake as you are now! That chap as they call Dusky Darrell, I reckon he smelt a mice, and found out somehow that the Injuns war gein' to 'tack 'em, 'cause he wouldn't let any of 'em go to sleep."

"Then why did you give the signal for us to advance

When you went back to the camp?"

"Cause the cussed snakes kept so still that I was green chough to think they war asleep. I didn't find out the truth till it war too late. I did give you the signal to retreat, but at the same second the reds give a screech, and 'tain't no wonder you didn't hear it."

" Do the pale-faces suspicion you?"

"I think they does, though I can't say fur sart in. They axed me who I was whistlin' to, when I give you the signal to a lyance, and I told 'cm I was tryin' to wake them up and put 'cm on that guard, 'thout lettin' the Injuns know it. The re's is sorter mad, ain't they?'

"Mad? I should say they were. They blame you fur the destruction of their brethren, and are impatient to get their hands upon you."

" Buillers! they wouldn't kill me?"

"They would tear you limb from limb."

" It would be best for me to steer clear of them then."

" For the present, yes. But what makes you talk so curicus, Dedzel? Yeur voice isn't natural."

In the beginning Dusky Darrell hall imitated the voice of the guide so skillfully, that there was no danger of the fractibeing detected, but the words of his companion reminded him that he was growing careless. But putting on a bold front, he coolly rejoined:

and I have a like the factor, less I've ketched cold, and I have the have to do that.

He had not been a that and no use tryin' to git the reds to make another attack?"

" If no at an I may went do it."

" Then what in creation will we do?"

"I'll tell y a-we'll resort to another method. You keep your position as guile, and I will continue to dog the caravan. When we reach the mountains we will manage to steal the gold, without massacreing the emigrants, some very dark night. Do you agree to that?'!

"Yas, in course."

"Then look out for the Wild Horseman, day after day."

Like a flash the crouching figure leaped up, and bounded upon the horse's back. The next instant he was off like a rocket in the darkness, riding across the prairie at a terrific rate.

CHAPTER VIII.

A RACE, AND WHAT CAME OF IT.

The stranger's sudden departure surprised Darrell not a little; and not only that, but it was also a sore disappointment to him.

To explain, Darrell had merely talked to the fellow, and kept up the conversation, for the double purpose of learning what might be learned in that way, and to keep the villain's mind occupied while he watched his chance to peunce upon him and pinion his limbs. It had been his intention to capture the unknown, and had scarcely had a thought of failing; but, of course, the possibility of such an abrupt and unlooked-for leave-taking had not occurred to him. Before he could divine his purpose the man was in the saddle and away, and before his trusty ritle could cover the receding form, it was too nearly swallowed up in the darkness to a last of any certainty in the result, had he fired. But he did not.

"Go, you varmint," he growled, as he lowered the hammer of his rifle; "yer time hain't come yit, that's plain as the nose on a man's face, but if it don't come 'fore many days are gone, Dasky Darrell misses his guess. It's cl'ar to me new that this chap as calls hisself Back Zigler, are the sam chap as the whites call the Wild Hossman, and he and Dedzel are on mighty good tarms. Tharfore this ain't the last we'll see of him, that's swore to."

Unable to discover the slightest trace of Adolphus Perkins, the trapper rejoined the emigrants, and told them how he had personated Nim Dedzel in the dark, and what he had learned thereby.

All were more or less surprised to hear that the Wild Horseman was the accomplice of Nim Dedzel, instead of the harmless maniac they had thought him, and a score of men swore, over the dead bodies of their fallen comrades, that, if Le continued to dog the caravan, he should share the punishthent in store for Dedzel. In all probability the guide would have been killed on the spot, but for the interference of Darrell, who said the fellow's time had not come yet, though he Should certainly receive his just deserts before long.

Morning dawned. Scarcely had the light of day appeared When a single horseman was seen approaching the camp, holding above his head a white feather as a token of peace. It Was an Indian-one of those who had attacked the whites in the night. A hearing was granted him, and he communicated his creand. He desired permission to carry away the bodies of his slain brothers. The request was complied with, and the Indian galloped away. In a few minutes he returned With several companions, who were to assist him in the removal of the corpses, and shortly afterward not a savage, dead or alive, was to be seen.

Toward noon the whites buried their dead. A number of spaces, which tool no wagon was without, were employed by it lustrioss hands, and two graves were dug side by side, each eight feet deep. Into these the bodies were lowered, and in Covering great care was taken to leave no traces of their Wh. reabouts. The graves were filled just to a level with the surface of the ground, and then the sod, which had been rethor I from the spot in the beginning, was returned to its be carefully, leaving no evilence that human bodies were biri i there. This precaution was taken for the purpose of deceiving the savages, who, it was surmised, would disinter the bodies and mutilate them according to custom, if the graves could be found.

When this solemn ceremony was over, other subjects were discus d. Dusky Darrell-who, by unanimous agreement, Lal been instailed in Nim Dedzel's position as guide—said it Were better to remain where they were during the remainder of that day and the coming night. In that case they would be well prepared to resume their journey on the following morning. None objected to this, for not a few believed the attack of the Cheyennes would be repeated when darkness came again, and they could not hope to find another point so convenient for defense as that they now held. Adolphus Perkins was another consideration. By remaining on Devil's Creek-as Dedzel called the stream on which they were encamped-they would be giving the missing man an opportunity to rejoin them, on the event of his still being alive. Now, as he recalled his interview with the stranger, Back Zigler, Darrell regretted exceedingly that he had not been thoughtful enough to inquire whether or not Adolphus was a captive among the Indians. He thought, however, that Zigler would have been very likely to mention it, without waiting to be asked, if such were the case.

That night nobody retired early, and when they did, many of them were so uneasy that they did not fall asleep until a late hour. Darrell stationed six guards around the camp, who were to be relieved by as many more at a certain hour of the night. This he did more to satisfy the others than because he deemed the precaution necessary, for he did not expect to be again molested by the savages. The information he had drawn from Buck Zigler, convinced him that if they were again disturbed it would not be by the Land that had attacked them on the preceding night. Nevertheless, there was nothing preposterous in the reflection that Indians from another tribe might fall upon them, and after all there was no safety in sleeping unguarded.

It was near the hour of three in the morning. A stillness deep and impressive brooked over the encampment. The hage wagons, with their white canvas tilts, loomed up in the darkness like an impassable barrier, includes the slepers within the circle; and the half dozon sentingles and at introvals round the space include, some leading against the wagons, quietly smoking, while others walked slowly backward and forward. Up to this hour the night half pased power fully away, no incident disturbing its tranquillity, no signs of danger being detected by the quick eye and ears on the alert. Now, however, at the very moment when all thoughts of hoofs sounded upon the hard turf at a little distance from the camp. In an instant every sentinel was listening intently, and beering sharply through the intervening gloom toward the spot whence the sound proceeded. Nothing could as yet be seen. The hoof-strokes were not those of a galloping horse, but of one that was moving at a brisk, steady walk. The sentinels stool silently at their posts, none of them turning asile to speak to his neighbor; for it was plain, that whether friend or enemy, there was but one person coming, and that there was no cause for alarm.

Pres ntly the solitary rider came in sight. First the head and shoulters of a man gradually rose out of the darkness, and became distinctly outlined against the distant gray sky.

Then the horse's head also appeared.

"Halt!" cried the nearest sentinel. "Who goes there?"

In obedience to the stern command the intruder drew rein, and his animal stood still. But he did not answer a word. Sitting in his saidle as silent and motionless as a graven image, he seemed contemplating the obscure scene before him in speechless wonder.

"By the Lord Harry !" yelled one of the guards, hurrying to the spot. "It's the Will Horseman!"

"The Wild Horseman!" shouted another.

"Down with him! Shoot him! Don't let him escape!"

The last exclamations were uttered just at the moment that the strange rider wheeled around with the quickness of lightning, and dashed away at a furious rate in the direction from which he had come.

"Shoot him! Quick!" cried several voices.

Three rides were discharged almost simultaneously at the Lying stranger. But all without effect.

At that juncture another horseman swept by the spot where the six guards were grouped together, and dashed madly out up a the plain in the tracks of the first one, leaning forward almost to his animal's neck, and gazing ahead with blazing eyes!

It was Disky Darrell. He had been lying awake and had heard the no turnal wanderer. He was listening when the Surd accosted the new-comer, and shortly afterward the cry that it was the Wild Horseman thrilled him through and through like an electric shock.

Quick as thought he had leaped to his feet, and smatched up his rifle. Without waiting to hear more he had then run to the spot where his steed was standing, and bound hap no his back with the agility of a monkey—had given him the word "go!" and a few seconds later the camp was behind him, and he was hotly pressing the stranger who had rilden so boldly up to the wagons.

Now began a race of a most exciting nature. The broad prairie stretched out before them as level as a flor, a ching to invite an endless run, though the durkness that hung over all was sufficient to hide whatever obstacles might have him in their way. Obviously the retreating man was now rilling for dear life, as the fast-clattering hoof-strokes told that he was putting his horse to the test. It was a mod, imputed is ride. Dusky Darrell allowed the reins to he untrached, while he held his rifle in both hands. The faithful black charger that bore him, wanted no guiding, and no led no span. It was not his first race, by many, and with his intelligent eye on the dark figure in front, he stretched his beautiful limits to the task, as if he took pride in exhibiting his extract linery fleetness of foot.

Before the first mile was fairly completed, it early is a that the trapper was steadily gaining ground. This exprised even the trapper himself, for, without forgetting that his own good steed had never been outdone in a motified speed, he had nevertheless made a micalculation at starting. What he had seen of the Wild Horsoman had beloked the lieve that he had a swift traveler to content with. He had established the fellow as he circled around the caravar, and his own eyes had given evidence that there was the trasing the long, clean limbs of the horse, that was salt an excelled. Naturally, then, he had not once the other of the aring the distance between them so soon.

A thought struck him. Probably it was at the Will Horseman, after all. The guards might have him mission. But, if not, who could it be? That he was not an Indian the trapper would have taken his outh. Another thought sire it him. It was the Wild Horseman, and the animal's falling riler, who in this manner was encouraging his pursuer on to an In line ambush. The former conjecture is came a settled on—the latter was given up as an improbability.

Thoughts such as the off. he I through Duri II's mind, but at the same time he procedover another mile without aboting a jot of the rate at which he was going. With both hand clatching the gun in front—with his body beat forward in an attitude more congruous than graceful—with his piercing orls the hing fire at every bound of the spirited brute beneath him—with a south 1 determination showing itself in his sturdy, frown face—thus, like a meteor, he darted across the level I mind, with his whole soul in the exciting chase. The object of his purple was in easy ride-range, and Darrell could have brought him to the earth at any moment, if he had felt to in line I; but that was not his purple of It was his desire to capture the milerent, take him back to camp alive, and I'm him with his fellow-conspirator, Nim Delich.

On they thundered, pellmell, headlong, helter-skelter-on,

CB, as swiftly as swallows on the wing.

After an hour of Lard riding, Darrell saw that the race was almost at an end, and a grim smile troubled the beard about his month. He was close upon the retreating horse man.

All at once the latter turn it abruptly to the left, and gallie planes at right angles with the course he had been pursuing. Durrell instantly drew rein, and came to a sudden had. Quekly his gun leaped to his shoulder, and was just as quietly aimed. The trigger fell—there was a flab in the during s—a report been and startling—and the gall ping the remaining to the earth.

The trapper give vent to a low chuckle, and rode forward simily. Helical not shot the man, but the horse.

Neverth 1 is, when he came to the spot where they had fall n, one was lying as motionless as the other. The name and are 1 is have no more life in him than the hore, and the hore was stone-dead. They were lying several yards at art.

Supering the follow was morely studed, Darrell dismonated and operated blim. Bending down he salzed him by the shoulder, and shook him a little. The effect was startling in the extreme. The stranger turned over, with a ground and testily exclaimed:

"Hangnation! why can't you let a man alme! I'm deader than any door-nail in the county! I'm shot! Haven't you humanity enough to let my remains rest in peace?"

Dusky Darrell drew back, and stared at the prostrate men in blank amazement. The next instant he clapped his hands on his sides, and burst into such a hearty fit of laughter that his whole frame shook, as if he was seized with the agree.

"Ha! ha! ha! ha! I hope I may be smalled thatter'n a beaver's tail if 'tain't Spiler!" he ejaculated. "Wal, that beats my time all holler. I knock under. What you layin' that fur, youngster? You ain't shot, any more'n I am."

Darrell's unrestrained merriment seemed to ast nish the fallen man exceedingly. He rose to a sitting posture of agetting, evidently, that he was dead) and stated at the old trapper like one just waking from a dreum.

"Git up, Spider. Don't you know me?"

"Thunderation! how should I know you? I'm not acquainted with everybody. Besides, I'm not sure whether this is Leaven or the infernal regions?"

Adolphus Perkins—for it was no other—passed his hand across his forehead two or three times, and looked about with a bewildered air.

Darrell shook with laughter again.

"You're still on 'arth, Spider," he said, "and ala't likely to be anywhar else fur some time."

"Good Lord! that's Dusky Darrell talking to me," exclaimed Adolphus, rising to his feet apparently with et mach effort.

"Sartin it is," was the quiet reply. "Who dill in think it was?"

"Why, I'll be hanged if I diln't think you was at Indian P

" And hyur's as thought you was the Will H - .........."

"Ha! ha! ha! laughed Adolphus, who was imm lively himself again; "this is a nice go, isn't it? But, rund is goodness!" he added, growing serious again, and shrugging his shoulders, as he bestowed a glance on his deal horse; "there was no occasion whatever to shoot at me,"

"I shot at the animile, not at you. But you may jist consiler yourself ail-fired lacky to escape as slick as you did, fir I war party like to draw bead on you instead of the 11088."

The exquisite shuddered, and began to feel himself all over, to make sure that he was not really shot.

" I didn't think of yer bein' anybody else but that 'ar Buck Zigier," continued the trapper, "and I had a notion two or three times of knockin' you out of your saddle, jist to see you drop."

"Gracious goodness !"

It could be seen, even in the darkness, that Adolphus turned pale.

"It 'u'd 'a' been yer own fault if I had settle I your hash," the hunter went on, with stern emphasis, " 'cause if it hadn't bon fur yer blasted cowardice thar'd been no danger of sich a tiling. Arter all, I don't know but I ought to have plugged yer confounded no idle."

"Why, demmit! that would have been an awful shabby trick."

"Bah! you'd no bizness to run from yer friends."

" How should I know that you were a friend? When I approached the camp, you all set up such a yell that I at once concluded the whites were all killed, and the caravan captured by Indians. There was not enough hospitality extended to me, so I retired."

"You war foolish fur leavin' the camp in the fust place."

Adalphus looked confused.

! "Well-I-yes, I gues I was," he stammered; "but I really did not think so at time."

"You thought then it war the easiest way to save yer life ?

"There is just where you are mistaken, my friend. I di in't go for that purpose. When we fired the first volley, I killed an Indian who had a fine, gold-mounted rifle in his prosession, and I thought it worth risking my life to procure. So I mounted my horse, and dashed out of the inclusure after the prize. But I was headed off by about a hundred savages, and I was compelled to fly for my life. As lark would have it, I managed to clude the red devils—"

"Wagh!" interrupted the trapper, "you needn't carry that story any furder, onless you kin sprinkle a little truth in it as yer goes along. Anybody 'u'd know you couldn't see a gold-mounted shooter in the Injun's hands, when it was so blasted dark you could skeercely see the Injun himself. Besides that, you're the last person as would risk his life to git hold of sich a prize, and you may tell a straighter tale than that, or none."

"If you know the story better than I, tell it," said Perkins, doggedly.

"As yer likes," was the imperturbable rejoinder. "When the first volley was fired the Injuns raised such a hubbub that you thought we's all doomed, so you concluded to save yer own life by cuttin' sticks. That's why you went, and it's a thousant wonders you didn't lose yer ha'r by it."

"Well," said Perkins, after some hesitation, "you needn't repeat that story to the fellows in camp. I should not like to have the Wellers hear it."

"I sha'n't tell any one, though all on 'em ought to know it. I'm e'ena'most out of patience with you, Spider. But we hain't got time to stand hyur palaverin'. I've an idea my presence is needed in camp, and I reckon we'd better to gittin' back thar."

"Just what I was thinking," said Adolphus, glad to change the subject. "I haven't been out of the saidle since I left you, nor have I had a mouthful of food. As a natural contequence, I am tired and hungry. But my horse is dead," he added. "I will have to walk."

"Mine will carry both of us," said Darrell. "Git on blind the saddle. That was two or three Injun hexes captured after the fight. You kin have yer choice out of them to pay fur your'n."

They both mounted the trapper's steed, and turned his head in the direction of the encampment.

CHAPTER IX.

THE CONDITIONAL " YES."

Ir was broad daylight when the two men reached Devil's Creek, and rode into the inclosure, amid the cheers of the emigrants.

Dusky Darrell quietly remarked that the Wild Horseman had given him the slip, but that the chase was a lucky one after all, since he had fallen in with Perkins who was lost upon the prairie. The latter was cordially greeted, and when he casually mentioned that he had eaten nothing since they saw him hat, Jack Weller made haste to mention that his sister and Rosa Brown had prepared a very palatable breakfast, in the discussion of which he must join them.

Of course he did not refuse, for besides being hungry he Lad been burning to see Julia Weller, from whom, it seemed to him, he had been separated an age. Imagine, then, his da compiture when, on finding himself once more face to face With the beautiful object of his adoration, she merely bowed to him with cold politeness, and turnel away. He was stanned. He could not guess what had so changed her. Even Rosa Brown, usually so shy, manifested much more pleasure at seeing him again than did Julia, from whom he Lal expected so much. No one appreared to netice the charge in her but himself. He not only noticed, but felt it he ply; and began to wonder who his rival was. He joinel the family at breakfast, but he did not relish the food he Let. Long as he had fasted, his appetite was gone. Julia Was lively as ever, and chatted gayly with the other memlers of the party, but whenever he spoke she was silent. Duilently, from some cause or other, she had formed an aversin to him, and that during his ab ence. Who was the b. kliter? Who had taken the opportunity to vilify him when he was not present to defend himself? He resolved to that out before the lapse of twenty-four hours, and, unless immediate reparation was made, there would certainly be a quantity of blood she I in that vicinity !

Shortly after breakfast was over the camp broke up; every thing about it was in motion; the warons move! forward in a line, and Devil's Creek was left in the rear. Under the supervision of the new guide every thing was properly conducted, and the emigrant train crept on over the identicable plain toward the distant "deggings." The Rocky Membrain range was in sight. Far away, and still low down in the horizon, the dim, bluish peaks could be seen, like a pile of clouds in the sky, reaching away to the north and south.

That evening, when the bustle and confusion of going into camp had subsided, Adolphus determined to a ldress Julia on the subject which was causing him so much mental pain. She had spoken to him but two or three times during the day, and even then had merely answered some pointed inquiry he had put to her. He made up his mind that this thing had gone about far enough, and that he must learn the cause of her very singular conduct toward him, before retiring.

As soon as a suitable opportunity offered, he approached the girl and spoke to her in a low tone.

"Miss Weller, will you do me the honor of walking with me for a few minutes, out upon the prairie?"

"Eveuse me," she replied, calmly. "I shall not walk this evening."

And she made as if she would leave him.

"Stay one moment," said Adolphus, and there was something in his quiet, steady voice that held her to the sp. t. "I have requested the honor of your company for a few minutes—not for the simple enjoyment of that honor, but for a purpose. I have something of importance to say to you."

" Could you not say it here as well?"

" No."

"Then you will have to postpone it."

Adolphus bit his lip, and toyed nervously with his watchchain. But when he spoke again his wife was firm and resolute.

"Miss Weller," said he, "what I have to say must be said at one time or another, and a postponement would be an inconvenience to me, besides doing you no good. Begging your pardon, I have decided irrevocably that you shall hear me on to let me take you aside from all these people, I will speak here, where I am likely to be overheard by others; but you will certainly regret, before I am through, that my simple request was not complied with. I leave it to your good sense to choose between the two alternatives."

Julia was surprised. She looked at him as if she would end his thoughts. His face was calm and impenetrable. After some hesitation, though even then appearing undecided, she said, briefly:

"I will go with you."

"Thank you," he murmured.

An i together they walked slowly away—beyond the circle of wagons, out upon the open prairie—just as though they were strolling for pleasure.

At a short distance from the encampment they paused, to be a large to walk backward and forward in a space of some yards. Then, at a look from his fair companion, Adolphus legan:

"You have probably conjectured are this, Miss Weller, that my object in bringing you hither is to request of you an explanation—"

Haparad, and cleared his throat.

"An explanation—" repeated the girl, in a manner that invited him to proceed.

"Previous to the event of our bloody conflict with the Cheyennes," pursued our hero, "you were vastly different from your present self. You did not shun me then as now; you did not so in cold and heaughty; you treated me with the unreserved familiarity of a friend. The change was fore I upon my notice immediately after my return this morning."

"Well?" she returned, coldly.

Ad halles bit his lips ar in, and grew more nervous.

"Will you explain why this is so?" he asked.

"Remember we can not always account for the little

"But I am positive—begging your pardon—that you are able to assign a cause for the change I have presumed to discover in you."

"Thank you for reminding me of my mi-take," said she, with a bow.

Undaunted, Adolphus proceeded

- "Has some one been assailing my character in my absence? That is, have I an enemy in camp who has sought to alienate us by slandering me while my back was turned?"
  "No."
- "If so, I shall take upon myself the responsibility of shooting him so full of holes that he won't make a doc at sieve!"
  "I said, No."
- "So you did; excuse me. But if that isn't the right explanation, I am unable to guess the cause of your singular dislike for me. Won't you tell me? I certainly have a right to know."

"Have I said that I dislike you?"

" Yes."

"You mistake, sir-"

"By your actions you have said it a dozen times."

Julia was silent. Adolphus stopped in his walk, filled his arms over his breast, and turned toward her.

"I see you are determined to tell me nothing," he said, and his voice shook a little now. "I see you are nothing, and I will urge you no further, though you certainly can not blame me for wishing to know how I have forfeited the esteem of one whose good will is prized above that of all others."

She raised her glorious eyes to his, and there was unlist guised pity in the look she gave him then. She hesitated and stammered, but only for a moment. Qui hly rec verify her self-possession, she spoke frankly and briefly in answer:

"Forgive me, sir—I do not blame you for making the inquiries, but, believe me, to answer them would be to hard your feelings unnecessarily, without doing the least good. I do not hate you—don't think that. I have acted rullly teday, perhaps; I will try and be more friendly here from I truly believe, aside from one failing, you make the conformation of more worthy persons than I."

"'Aside from one failing," repeated the years in an

" May I ask what that failing is?"

" Please don't. If this particular foible were not the only grievous one you have shown, I could mention it to you without compunction, but since you have appeared a man in every other respect, I would forbear. Others, very likely, would not view this in the serious light that I do, but I have always felt a singular loathing for the weakness in question, regarding it as unpardonable in a man, and quite contemptible even in a woman. Therefore, if I deem you worthy of contempt, it is all because of that disgraceful weakness you pos sess."

Adolphus was astonished. He tried to consider.

"Do tell me to what you allude," he pleaded, unable to conjecture. "If I but knew the nature of this habit, or foible, of which you speak, I would cast it from me without delay."

"I fear not," she returned, shaking her head.

"Would I not? Try me and see. Why, bless you, there is nothing in the wide world I would not do—or attempt to do—for your sake. Willingly would I lay down my life at your feet, if by that means I could win back your respect for not. I would do any thing for you, Julia."

" For me?"

Her eyes sought the ground, and a blush mantled her cheeks.

Adolphus instantly found himself ungovernable.

"Julia," he cried, passionately, reizing both of her hands and holding them tightly; "dear, dear Julia, I see you have guessel the truth. Since it can no longer be concealed I may as well confess. Darling, I love you—love you with a strong, fervent adoration which language of mine can not express. I had thought my love was encouraged—had dared to hope with it was even reciprocated—but to-day I have evidently less favor in your sight than at the moment of our first meeting. Julia, speak to me. Can you not overlook this fault of which you speak, and be mine forever? Or tell me what it is, that I may attempt rectification. Don't turn me away without an explanation. Try to bear with me. I worship you! I can not—oh! I can not live without you?"

She hesitated, and was silent. His passionate outburst was intirely unexpected, as her confusion showed, and the sullen avowal so bewildered her that she could not frame an answer at once.

With a determined effort she succeeded in mastering her emotion, and with comparative calmness said:

"Sir, this was so unlooked-for; I can not answer now."

"You can! You must?" cried Adolphus. "I can not endure the suspense. You certainly know whether you love me or not. Oh, tell me that you will be mine! Tell me, even, that I may hope."

She looked up at him now, and in the dim light it could be seen that she had recolved to hide the truth no longer.

- "Mr. Perkins," said she, gently but firmly, "as you will have me say it, I can never consent to be the wife of a-a-"
  - " A what?" he demanded.
  - " A coward !"

Adolphus took a step backward, and stared at her. He understood it all now, and was overwhelmed with enfacion.

- "Cowardice, then, is the despicable weakness you have discovered in me?" he stammered, looking very foolish indeed.
  - "It is," she replied.
  - "And do you really think I'm a—ahem !—a cowar! ?"
- "I am certain of it, sir. If you were not, it do sn't stand to reason that you would have fled on the night of the attack."
  - "Then you concluded that my flight was caus d by fear?"
- "As a matter of course. There are many who believe year had pardonable reasons for leaving when you did—ressess that you do not care to mention—but I can not be so convinced."
  - " And why?"
- Because, when you rushed by the spot where R is an I were standing, any one might have seen that you were frightened half out of your wits. Your eyes were wild, and terror was written on every lineament of your face. In hel, I don't like to say it to you, but you can not consure has after driving me to it."
- "It is a most contemptible weakness, I admit,' said Addiplus. "I have always been ashamed of it, but never so tauch as now. Tell me, darling, if I give you my word of honor as a gentleman that I will never act the coward again so long as I live, will you, in return, promise to be my wife?"

Julia blushed again, and hung her head.

"I have never thought of such a thing," she murmured.

"But I wish you to think of it now," he replied.

"Before I answer, tell me this: are you willing to prove, instead of promise, that you will cast off this unmanly timidity?"

"Willing? Just tell me how I can prove it, and I'll mighty soon show you whether I'm willing or not."

"Then, on one condition, I will consent to your pro-

"Name the condition."

" Will you capture the Wild Horseman?"

Adolphus staggered back as if she had struck him.

"Capture him," she continued, in her calm, clear accents, "and bring him a prisoner to the camp. If you do that my hand is yours."

He looked at her as if he were inclined to question her sanity. She said no more, but waited for him to speak. He could not regard it as a jest. She meant it, certainly.

They walked back to the encampment, neither of them uttoring a word until they were within the inclosure. Then they parted. He bade her good-night quite cheerfully, kissed her hand in a very lover-like manner, murmured, "My own darling!" and left her standing there alone under the starstalked sky. He was still a little pale as he walked away, but a quiet, resolute look was stamped upon his face, which no person ever before had seen there.

Dasky Darrell was standing with his back toward him, enjoying his evening pipe.

"Darrel!, I'll be one of the watchers to-night," he said, quite authoritatively.

"You?" exclaimed Darrell; "ain't you afeard a red-skin 'il sheak on yer? If yer wants to watch to-night, Spider, yer kin stan I guard over that wagon than whar Nim Dedzel is e-verel up. What do yer say?"

"All right," was the quiet response. "Instead of being one of the sentinels I will stand guard over Dedzel." And Adolphus walked briskly away.

"Smash me if that don't sorter s'prise this beaver," muttered Darrell.

CHAPTER X.

.... A NIGHT OF EVENTS.

ADOLPHUS PERKINS sat in the fore end of the wagen, in which the traitorous guide was confined, his rifle between his knees, and one of his favorite Havanus between his teach. It was just midnight by his unerring chronometer, and everybody but the guards had long since retired. The half-dozon vigilant sentinels occupied places at regular intervals enough the inclosure. A strong wind swept down from the discontinuous mountains, occasionally bearing with it the shrift cry of a new distant animal, and the black clouds went and ling across the sky like a fleet of phantom vessels on the sea.

Adolphus had a lantern be ile him, which he held to the the opening every once in a while, as he looked in to see if the prisoner was all right.

At length he tosted his eigar away, and taking op the last tern, he quietly slipped off the back of the stat, and in an instant was inside the wagon under the canvas the that eyered it.

On a bed of straw, surrounded by boxes and bornels, lay the burly form of Nim Dedzel. He was for a loop, and sarring loudly. He was bound hand and for the Thrusting his hand into the broat-pecket of his order. At lephus drew forth a little look, from which has three das like leaf, and placed it, with the book and lead-peach, or at lex at his elbow. After that, he made the light in the last in the last in the light in the last in seeithant as possible, and set it on the first order to the sleeping man's face that it almost touched his near the lead deliberately drew the revolver from his left, or he lightly with his finger on the trizer, placed the last results in the prisoner's face as he had placed the last results.

I sition he watched and waited, his eyes fixed upon the rugged face of the guide.

Presently the strong light did its work. At first there was a secreely perceptible quiver of the eyelids; then the eyes slowly opened, and dazzled by the bright glare, began to blink rapidly.

"Devil take the glimmer!" growled the man, turning his lead to ecope it. Then he beheld Adolphus Perkins bending over him, the revolver close to his head. He turned white, tall tried to shrink away from it.

"Heavens!" he greped, "take that ar' thing away! Who be you?"

- "Sil nee!" commanded Adolphus, in a whisper. "I don't want to kill you. Answer me this question: Can you write?".
  - "Wal, kinder; nothin' to speak on."
  - "Dil Buck Zigler ever see your writing?"
  - "Who?" Nim Dedzel started violently.
- "Back Zigher," repeated Adolphus. "Answer me quick!
  Den't stop to ask questions. Did he ever see your writing?"

" More'n once."

Adolphus drew a long breath of relief.

"See Lere, Dedz I," said he, in a hard, resolute tone, "I'm gaing to until your hands and have you write a note to Buck Z gler, at my dietation. You needn't stare; I mean precisely what I say; and the first sign of a refusal seals your doom. It will do you no good to try and get the advantage of me as your hands are free, for if you attempt to harm me there will be no chance of your c caping with your life, while your feet are tied."

He haid the weapon aside as he spike, and dextrously removed the cord that bound the captive's write. This accomplished, he took up the piece of blank paper and placed it on the floor in the light of the lantern. Then he put the hadden line is the chancy fingers of Dolzel, took up the revelver and once more presented it at the villain's head, communating him to write while he dictated. The latter restell inself on his light hand writed to be told what he should write. In his own characterist to style he put down each word as it fell from our hero's lips.

What with his awkwardness and inexperience, he was a long time finishing the few words that were to be written, but when at last the note was completed, Perkins looked at it and was satisfied.

It was a miserable scrawl, but the words were capable of being deciphered. They ran as follows:

Buck zigler:—They is a Young chap in kamp as sez he kan whip you in a far fite On hoss bak and he says he is Boun fur to chaloge you the Varry nex time you kum in site. He is a little feller and he is office Green and he is rite from the staits and he thinks he is office smart. If you kum roun tunierry and he rides out torst you jist wate fur him and taik his chaloge. Yule kerflumix the kuss in the which of a skunks tale. Now i hav my reezins fur axing this and i want you to Do L. They haint no Danger.

Nimrod DeDzel."

It would be utterly impossible to describe the expression the guide's face wore as he handed this note to the dictator, but amazement was predominant. Perkins, instead of paying the least attention to the searching look bestowed up a him, coolly proceeded to retie the rufflan's hands, just as he had found them. Then, after warning Dedzel, on his life, to mention the transaction to nobody, he returned the revolver to his belt, took up the lantern and resumed his position on the outside of the tilt.

"So much done satisfactorily," said Perkins to himself, as he lighted another eigar, "but it may be weeks I fore a chance will offer to put it in Buck Zigher's possession. Nevertheless, he it early or late, on the day after he reads this note he becomes my prisoner, or I die by his hands! I wish he had the message, to night."

A half-hour later, as he still sat there in deep medication, are espied the form of a man gliding swiftly along on the ground below him. It came in from the prairie, pased through the boundary and was within the inclosure. It came close to the wagon where our hero was watching. He recognized the actions of the figure.

"Hello, Darrell," he hailed; "what the blazes are you do-

"Hush, Spider," admonished the trapper, coming clim to the wagon, and speaking in a low tone. "I don't want anybody to know it 'cept you, but I've see'd a sight." The trapper pointed toward the plain, and whispered: "The Wild Horseman are right out yonder."

"The Wild Horseman!" ejaculated Perkins, almost jumping from his seat. Where is he ?---how far away ?"

"Only a little ways. He's hanging round tryin' to see Dedzel, I take it."

"And you didn't pop him over?"

"No; he's thar yit. I'm goin' fur to try to take that cuss a prisoner and am goin' fur the larry-at to nocse him," and the trapper hurried away.

No sooner was he gone than Adolphus leaped nimbly to the ground, and glanced sharply in every direction.

"I den't like to work against yeu, Darrell," he muttered, "lut we'll see whether the Wild Horseman is your game, Jet."

He had proceeded but a short distance, after leaving the confines of the camp, when he halted suddenly. There, right in his path was a horse, and a man was on his back. He had come upon them unexpectedly. It was the Wild Horseman!

"Step!" commanded the man in his path. "Who comes there?"

"Fly, Zigler! Quick! for your life!" Adolphus said in a low tone, as, advancing he handed the horseman a piece of paper and then was gone.

As he field, he listened intently, and in a moment had the satisfaction of knowing that his warning was heeded. The clatter of horse's broke upon his cars. The Wild Horseman was retreating at break-neck speed.

Hark! The keen crack of a ritle rung out upon the stillness of the night. It was Dusky Darrell's ritle. Had he shot the herseman, after all? The clatter of hoofs on the hard two continued with unabated swiftness. Was it the steed alone, flying frantic with fear, made riderless by the discharge of that unerring gun?

Ade phus approached the camp by a circuitous course, entering it at a point nearly opposite that at which he had made his exit; informing the guard, as he passed, that he had been out for a little scout. He hurried back to his post, half forful now he had been detected in his act. Panting with excitement, and the exertion he had undergone, le leaped upon the seat in front of the wagon, and sat down le side his lantern.

No sooner had he done so than he saw the trapper centing. He was walking slowly, loading his rifle as he cance.

Before he could enter the inclosure, Darrell was surrounded by the guards, and several others who had been awakened by the shot, overwhelming him with enter, excited inquiries. Adolphus could not hear the answers that were given, but his kept his seat, fairly trembling with impatience for the crowd to disperse. When the trapper was once more along our hero dropped to the ground and joined him.

" Hello, Darrell. Shot him, did you?"

"Wagh! you heern my shooter bark, I s'poso?"

"You didn't miss him, I hope?"

" Didn't do nothin' else."

" You miss?"

"Nothin' shorter; did't hit the cuss," persisted Darrell, "cause I didn't see him when I fired. Don't know what made the coon git in sich a blasted hurry, but jist afore I got in sight of him he put, as fast as that long-legal I has of his kin travil. You see, I might have wiped him out when I first see'd him, but I thought I'd just has o the small and so drag him into camp for a show. Good Lord, how he did git! I mought as well 'a' shot at a streak!"

The next merning dawned bright and beautiful, and the wagon-train was in motion at an early hour.

A marked change had come over Adolphus Perkins; a change that none could help but observe. He no leaser seemed the lively, laughing, dandyish person he had higher; been, but was grave and silent, as if at last a serious the using had entered his mind. Even Jack Weller, or Dusky Durrellace could draw but few words from him, and he never so has he as looked Julia in the face when he came near her.

At noon the emigrants halted, as u unl, for the milling rest and repast. The horses were unbitched, and foliat the rear end of the wagons, and every preparation made for the customary hour's halt. Smoke began to rise from a number of fires, which the men kept replenished with fuel, while the women cooked, and the air was soon laden with the savery

Odor of boiling meat. The day, which had dawned so gloriously, had lost none of its beauty. The sun shone unobscured from the zenith, and that, with the steady breeze which is always felt on the plains, rendered the temperature delightful.

While nearly all of the party were engaged in the interesting duty of contributing to their appetite, a small boy jumped up and cried out, at the top of his voice:

"There he is a min! Here he comes! Whoop!"

It was the Wild Horseman. He was still far away, but was approaching swiftly.

At length it was seen that he was coming much nearer than he had ever ventured before. The bold rider suddenly drew rein, and sat silently in his saddle, looking toward the camp. He made a tempting target for a skillful marksman, and more than one gun was taken up and cocked.

The stranger did not move.

Adolphus Perkins was seen to separate himself from the crowd, and walk hastily to the spot where his horse was standing. As if in a great hurry, he vaulted into the saddle. His next act was to cast his rifle to the ground; his hext to examine his revolvers; then he tightened his belt, gathered up the reins, and turned the animal's head toward the Horseman!

CHAPTER-XI.

THE TOURNAMENT ON THE PRAIRIE.

"Hold on, Spider!" shouted Darrell. "What you goin' to do?"

He turned half around, and pointed toward the Wild

"I'm going to capture that man!" he said, in a clear, stealy voice.

Hal a thunderbolt fallen from the blue sky above, it could scarcely have created more surprise. It would have been startling from any source, but Adolphus was the very last person from whom such a thing was expected. He was outwardly calm, but pale as death, and it could be seen by every one that there was no jest in the words he had uttered.

All were on their feet now, more or less amazed, alarmed and excited.

"Don't fear for me," he said, speaking loud enough for all to hear. "If I fail in this undertaking, cowardice will not be the cause. I arranged with this fellow last night, to meet me in mortal combat to day, and if he is not my prisoner in a half-hour—there is but one alternative.".

He waved his hand, gave his horse the spur, and rode out upon the prairie at a gentle canter.

"Mount yer animals, 'bout a dozen of yer, and see that yer weepins are in order. That young chap are in 'arnest, shure's shootin', and if the varmint proves too much fur him we'll jist gallop out that and part 'em."

Every man mounted, and all held themselves in readiness for a charge.

When within a hundred yards of his enemy, Adolphus reined in his steed, and for some minutes they sat still, looking at each other. The contrast between the two was most striking. The apprehension which the emigrants felt for their man, amounted almost to despair as they locked at the big, muscular, ferocious fellow with whom he had to deal. Le, on the other hand, possesed neither great strength, powers of endurance, nor experience. There was a breathless silence, as they waited for the fight to commence.

All at once Adolphus threw up his hand as a signal. I.lle a shot the two horses bounded forward at the same instant. But the tactics of the combatants were entirely different. While Adolphus dashed straight ahead, as if he would rile over his opponent at full gallop, the latter, more experienced, wheeled suddenly to the left and began to swe p around him at headlong speed. Adolphus saw at once that his antagenist way trying to draw as many shots from him as possible, and at the same time reserve his own; so he acted accordingly, keeping his eyes on the fellow like a hawk, and haller his six-shooter in readiness.

As soon as they had passed beyond each other, both thanged their course and dashed forward again, the outlaw now riding around his man in the other direction. Seeing that his plan had failed, the Wild Horseman fired the first shot.

It was quickly done, and accurately aimed, but Perkins saw what was coming in time to avoid it. Quick as lightning he dropped behind his horse, and when he rose again to the saddle he revealed the fact that he had escaped unhart.

"It is his excellent horsemanship, rather than his fighting abilities, that saves him," observed Mr. Weller.

"He's powerful active, that's dead sartin," said another of the men. "Thar ain't many of us in this crowd what 'ud dodged that shot as purty as he done it."

Just then there was another report. Perkins had emptied the chanber of his revolver, but with no better success than had attended the other.

The outlaw now fired two shots in rapid succession. Despite the ducking of his head, one of the balls whistled by close to Perkins' car; the other inflicted a slight wound in his thigh, and splintered the back of the saddle.

Now they began to circle 'round each other, dodging and meneuvering with the agility of cats, each closely watching the movements of the other.

It was a horrible sight to witness, and yet there was an awfal fascination in it that held every eye enthralled. On the dark face of the Wild Horseman was a look of beastlike ferceity. Adolphus was still calm, pale and impenetrable, but there was an air about him which was deally, and which his friends did not fail to observe with renewed hope.

All at once the outlaw changed his tactics. With a whoop that would have done justice to a dozen Indians, he wheeled; round and galloped away like the wind, as if he were suddenly beset with fear, and was flying for his life. Before Adolphus could recover from his surprise, the man changed his course as quick as thought, and fired!

All house dropped to the ground like a stone. But the next instant he was on his animal's back again, though his lat was off now, and the blood was streaming down over his walle face from a slight wound at the roots of his hair. The villain saw that he had not missed his aim this time, and with a roar of exultation he bore down upon his young adversary with all the speed contained in the limbs of his fleet charger. But the young knight did not flinch. His heart was still firm and his hand still steady, though almost blinded by blood. Those who were watching him saw his revolver hap up to a level with his face, at a moment when they were lease expecting it.

There was a putf of white smoke—a sharp report—and the outlaw and his brave steed came tumbling to the carth together!

But, it was the animal that was killed, not the man. While the former lay motionless where he had fallen, the latter sprung to his feet and glared at his enemy like a ferocious beast. He was evidently of the opinion that he had found his match in the little fellow from "the States."

Adolphus was seen to make another quick movement. Something began to whirl round his head in a series of circles or coils, and then it shot out into the air like a long black serpent.

"The lasso! the lasso!" yelled one of the spectators.

"Smash me if it ain't the lasso!" cried Darrell, speaking rapidly. "I shot Spider's critter t'other night; he's nil the Injun's hoss ever since, and that was a last attached to it. Look! Hurrah!"

The noose of the lasso settled down over the neck and shoulders of the amazed and half-stunned villain. He pare a hoarse yell, and made a frantic effort to throw off the call but, with a quick jerk, Adolphus tightened the nece, and at the same time harled the man violently to the ground.

He then leaped nimbly from his saidle, and ran to the spot where the fallen man lay. He was stretched out on his back, with both arms pinlened to his sld's in socially that, with all his strength, he was unable to move them. O's reing this, Adolphus seized the rope and passed it's veral that more around the arms and body of the reversel, tying it carefully. After that, he assisted him to his feet, and informed him that no good would come of further resistance on his part; that he was a pri oner, and could make actling clse out of himself for the present.

Adolphus was master of the field. He once more mounted his horse, and rode slowly back to camp, holding the lasso which bound his captive, while the latter had no alternative but to walk quietly along behind.

Cheer upon cheer rose from the excited emigrants, as he coolly led his crestfallen prisoner into their midst. They crowded 'round him with a deafening chorus of yells.

"Hurrah for Perkins!" was the cry.

"Spiler," shouted Dusky Durrell, pushing through the crowd and grasping his hand, "smash me if you ain't a' trusp! You've behaved yerself like a man—you have, by the Etarnal! and hyur's as never calls you a coward ag'in!"

"Thank you, Darrell," he replied, with a triumphant gleam in his eyes. "It is a pleasure to feel that I have redeemed myself."

The Wild Horseman—or Buck Zigler, as he may now be called—stood among his enemies erect and silent. A sullen scowl was on his dark visage, as he glanced from face to face, and none of the inquiries addressed to him received the slightest answers, by word or sign. He was a tall man, muscular and well proportioned—a perfect tower of strength and physical beauty—comparing to his captor as the lion to the squirrel. His hair streamed down his back, long, and black, and straight as an Indian's, and the character of his dress was purely savage. But he was a white man, for all that, though a few argued that there was Indian blood in his veins.

As soon as the crowd that encompassed him would permit, Adolphus role forward, still leading his helpless charge. His warching gaze alighted upon Julia Weller, standing by leaself. He leaped nimbly down from his horse's back, and stool before her, bowing low, he said:

"Julia, the Wild Horseman is here. He is your prisoner, not mine. Have I won the prize?"

She blushed and trembled. Everybody was looking at them in blank suprise. The girl recovered her self-possession, and lifting her innocent, truthful eyes to his, she gave him her hand.

"I am not the person to break a promise," she replied, frankly. "You have proved yourself a hero; I am yours from this hour."

Then the people saw instinctively how matters stood, and the air was filled again with shouts, and cheers, and congratulations. Mr. Weller stood back, staring at them in speech less wonder for awhile; then he grasped the happy lover's hand.

"My blessing on you both," he said. "Take good care of her, my boy; you have indeed won a prize, though I, her father, say it."

Our young Lochinvar had received two slight wounds, or scratches, in the fight. He now proceeded to wash the blood from these, and when they were properly dressed, he quietly made the announcement, that "Richard was himself again."

In the mean time, two or three men took charge of the prisoner. After looking about him for awhile, as if in quest of somebody he couldn't find, he appeared to lese all patience, and gave vent to a fierce oath.

"Whar's Nim Dedzel?" he gruffly demanded.

Before an answer could be given, Dusky Darreli sterped in front of him and coolly surveyed him from head to foot.

"Who's that you're inquirin' arter?" he asked.

"I want to see the guide of this wagon-train," was the bullying reply.

"Wal, look at him. It's a free kentry."

"Where is he?"

"Stan'in' right afore yer twinklers."

"It's a lie! The guide's name is Nim Dedzel."

"Is it? I thought 'twar Dusky Darrell! That's a chap layin' on his back in that wagon yender, with his lands and feet tied, as sez his handle are Nim Dedzel. But, he sin't the guide fur this party, nor hain't been since the night the Cheyennes attacked us. His treachery war diskivered after the attack, and he's been in limbo ever since."

Buck Zigler looked frightened and perplexed. "I could not have been deceived," he cried.

"You have been, till this minute," said the trapper. "You think you had a confab with Dedzel right after the fight, on the battle-field, don't yer? Wal, yer didn't. Dedzel w.s in limbo. It was me you war talkin' to."

The outlaw was silent for a minute or two. Then he started, and with an air of credulity exclaimed:

"By Heaven! I thought that voice sounded strangely."
"Curse you!" he hissed, ferociously. "But I still believe you lie," added the ruffian. "Here is a note I received from him last night. It is his handwriting. I would know it anywhere."

The prisoner was allowed the use of one hand till the note was produced. Some one read it to Darrell.

"When did you git that?" he asked.

" Last night; I was near your camp."

"Who gave it to you?"

"I didn't see the man's face, but I concluded it could be no other than Dedzel."

"I can explain that note," said a cheerful voice, and Adolplus Perkins appeared beside the trapper.

Thereupon he briefly related how he had procured the writing from Dedzel, and how it had been delivered.

The prisoner ground his teeth. "How could I have been so blind?"

"You may thank yer lucky stars that you war so blind," said Darrell, "fur if you hadn't tuck Spider's warnin' and just, jist when you did, this shooter of mine would have kivered you, and than'd been one less scoundred in the world."

With this he ordered the men to put Buck Zigler into the wagon in which Nim Dedzel was confined, and to tio his limbs as Dedzel's were tied.

CHAPTER XII.

OF COURSE.

That night the emigrants formed their encampment near a patch of timber, and on a remote tributary of the Platte river. The noon halt had been so lengthened by the combat between Adolphus and the Wild Horseman, and the matter-of-course delay that followed an event so exciting, that they only traveled five miles further before sunset. Adolphus was the hero in the camp that night, and but little else was talked about besides the fight, its cause and result. Julia did not object now to a stroll with him in the starlight!

During the evening, before any had retired for the night, a man sauntering lazily about, accented Dusky Darrell in a careless manner:

- "I say, Darrell, I suppose you're going to be the judge as to what shall be done with the prisoners?"
- "I don't know," replied the trapper. "If the rest want me to, I will, though any one else would do as well, I take it."
  - "It is expected of you, nevertheles."
  - "Then I'm in fur it."
  - "And what will you do with the secundrels?"
- "Wal," said the trapper, musingly, "I hain't thought much about it yit, and since they killed two of our fellers, I wouldn't feel very bad to see 'em strung up to the nearest tree. But, hyur's as likes to see justice done everywhar, and I recken we oughten't to do that without givin' the cusses a fair show. I opine we'd better hand them over to the people at the next fort."

"Hem! Yaas; I think they'll stretch," the man muttered, as he sauntered away.

It was past midnight. As was usual at that hour, the camp was wrapped in silence, and everybedy was asleep, or seemingly so, except the guards.

These executives up to this time had stood quietly at their posts, as though they had nothing in their minds by nd the faithful discharge of their duty. But now there was a movement among them that would have occasioned much surprise, if not suspicion, had they been watched. They all came together on one spot, and began to talk to one another in low, carnest tones, gesticulating in a very mystericus manner. In a minute they were joined by six other forms, all approching stealthily from different points, and they were received by the first six in a manner that showed their certaing had been expected.

The consultation continued for a few memorial larger. Then began operations which would have looked still more suspicious to a looker-on than any thing preceding them. The little band separated into equal parts, and each half left the spet as if it were a group of spirits, if one might judge from the noiselessness of their movements. Six men stole to the wagens in which the prisoners were kept. After hovering about it for a while, some of them elimbed cautiously up in front of the vehicle, and disappeared within. The others waited for them in silence, apparently keeping watch. There was some delay inside; then the men reappeared, dragging with them the two prisoners, who were still helplessly bound, and who had handkerchiefs tied securely over their months to incure silence. There was a wild, scared look in their eyes, while upon the faces of those who dragged them forth, were expressions of vindictiveness and fierce determination.

The outlaws were now carried back to the spot where the whispere I consultation had been held. In the mean time the other six men had procured two horses which they were holding there in readiness. The cords that bound the feet of the cuptives were speedily removed, and the captives themselves were lifted upon the backs of the horses with their hands still tiel.

When this was accomplished, two men led the animals, while the rest walked beside them and watched the riders, and in this manner the party moved away. The timber was not many rods from the encampment. They approached it with the soleian silence of a funeral cortege. Only a word now and then was uttered, and so softly even then, that the stilln as remained unbroken.

Phinly the woods was their destination. They entered the somber shadows, and were under the dense foliage of the trees, where the darkness was intense. They moved on until they came to a small glade, on one side of which stood a tree of mmonse size. If re they halted. The gigantic tree in question half one large limb projecting horizontally from the trunk, at a distance of ten feet from the ground. The two horses were led forward, and made to stand side by side, directly under the horizontal limb.

A reper was produced, and a none made in each one of it. One of the endows was then put over Nim Delzel's head, and drawn of a ly around his neek. A smothered grown was heard behind the handkerchief that covered the villain's month, but it had no more effect upon the mon than did the merry chirp of a tree-toad near by. The rope was drawn up, and passed three times around the limb above. Then the other end was brought down, and the noose fastened to Back Zigler's neck. He sat stoically erect, and, unlike his less courageous compeer, did not utter a sound.

All was ready now for the final act. Two men stood by, each with a whip in his hand, waiting for the moment they should use them. At a given signal they both gave the horses a sharp cut with the whips. The animals boun ied forward simultaneously. There could be but one result. Both horses were riderless in an instant, and the two outlaws were dangling in mid-air!

It was a sickening sight, but those revengeful men looke laupon it with sensations of relief. These renegades had been the cause of two deaths among the emigrants, and nothing less than their lives could compensate for the loss. Consequently, they were now suspended between heaven and earth, suffering the agonies of death.

When the last struggle was over, and the lifeless bolics hung limp and motionless from the limb, the twelve avengers turned away, and silently retraced their steps, evidently satisfied with their night's work. The horses, which they used as substitutes for a scaffold, were led back to the camp, and returned to the exact places from which they had been taken.

Just as the party was about to disperse, however, every member of it was surprised and startled by the unexpected appearance of Dusky Darrell, the trapper.

"Wal, boys," said he, coolly, as he confronted them, "you 've had a purty good night fur lynchin' them fellers, and I reckon yer can't complain of the success you've had. Of course nobody knows it, 'cause you war too 'cate to wake 'em."

Not one of the number had any thing to say in reply. The trapper indulged in a quiet laugh, and a likel, in a defirent tone:

"To be honest with yer, boys, I don't blame you an a tam fur stringin' them cusses up, though if I'd seen you take 'em out that I reck on it 'ud been my duty to put an eend to yet little game. Don't be afeard. I'm keep in' mum." And now there is but little left to tell.

Under the skillful guidance of Dusky Darrell, the wagon-train was conducted through the Rocky Mountains safely, and at the first fort they arrived at, west of the range, Dusky Darrell bid the emigrants a friendly farewell and left them. All were reluctant to part with him, and especially Adolphus Perkins, but he declared it "warn't needcessary that he should go furder." Before leaving he secured the services of a guide at the fort, whom he put in his place with the assurance that he could be trusted. Adolphus never saw the trapper after that day.

The emigrants reached their destination in due time, and one day, in the city of San Francisco, there was a double wedding, which not only made Adolphus and Julia happy for life, but also Rosa and Jack. Our hero was contented in the conviction that he had won his wife fairly, and never after that did his former timidity reappear.

But he did not like the country in which they had settled, and in a few months he announced his determination of returning to the East with his young wife. Jack and Rosa were more than willing to accompany them, and as Mrs. Weller would not consent to part from her children, and as Mr. Weller was already disgusted with his undertaking and new location, they all decided to go back together to their former homes. But, instead of risking another perilous and tedious journey across the plains, they took the steamer from San Francisco and bid adieu to the land of gold. We will not enter into the particulars of that homeward voyage, but will merely say that it was completed in safety.

And now, kind reader, since you have patiently followed his through this, our little narrative, and have seen our characters out of the trials and dangers that beset their way, into the path of happiness and prosperity, we gratefully make our bow.

Young People's Hand-Books

The Dime Hand-Books for Young Poople cover a wide range of subjects, and are especially adapted to their and. They constitute at once the cheapest and the most useful worse yet put late the market for popular exemistion. Each velime 100 pages 12mm, sent pestpaid on recept of price, by the pub. shers, BLADLE AND ADAMS, 98 W...... Street, New York.

No. 1.-DIME GENTS' LETTER-WRITER.

And Practical G. in to Composit ora, our racing forms, models, a great, he and mine for the god of all Casses, Dail of Charens; also a late full for wells and ell assure, then erw to sorrest forms, and also a complete dictionary of multives, pursues, survives, etc. In Lucia La-GRAND, M. D.

COMPOSITION.—The secret of a good letter; directions to a novice; the rules of composi-

SEVERAL ADVICE TO LETTER-WRITERS.

- ITF . . OF B' - . > 1. - . FITHS OF PLEASURE AND BLIEND

SHIP.

LETTERS OF LOVE .- Hinto and suggestions; a declaration; answer; a briefer declaration of attachment; answer; real love-letters of er alternature, etc.

-Elizaber In Il, Ou TRUST, Fre. - Win Wat Il No. 11 Value THE Pales. . ev are and he we have to a cas; from, etc., IMPLOPEDE DESCRIPTOR. alv. of realable to Lor tr. col, ac .; a t PHRANES, MOLITORS, IDIONS, Lr.

at silence; communicating distressing news; to parents, informing of their son, etc.

LETTERS OF RELATIONSHIP .- Family conrespectionate; its strate and ter and property t es; examples of real le ters, etc.

LEFFERS OF VARIOUS OCCASIONS, - A certificate of character; another, for a maid; another, for a clerk; application for a schooltescher a place; activity a vote; decide a ga I i when a get app programs a pane, and itteriati uten fera governosa altualisti, ate

No. 2.-DIME BOOK OF ETIQUETTE.

bortaness therein enthered a guld to true grature and grateful gardanested reading to the congress of a restrict for the first and the first the second transfer and transfe e a gray, in I was Part, to tast a to an tare, of the lance Core, of st ., ev. I'm and express for the " I shere," to a Committee of Parwer mark of good breeding.

CY VIS. INT. OFFICE TEC. -- The law of the case a flaw of an income with Valuate proof, , in a . i ... presentations 00 2 1 6 7 4

El. IN PARITY, DAY '18, Erc. The et the state of the call from the training of the billion of the state of for the experience

GAM, THE CARLS INTELS, Dre - WINTER per and a ser in the property ries of the at wa, the laureer of of bette g or trans 8 2.

TATRIANCE IN TO SUCCETY. - Confidence vs. UN CONVERSATION. - Its mast, incases, incases, and good that rest is the Total Studies was the beres rest a low to compate yourself; a record OF CRES AND ORNAMENTS The vol ON DETTING AND NOTE WESTING .- Pro-Kanin (" da " at re, a tremate a protes at 1 for the first same; got to ral directions for a good letter.

TOPY TO GIVE AND LIDERY INVITED TITLY - formered reaged a milestell.

ON ENTERTAINMENTS,-Etiquette of the table; how to a rve a guest, and how to be served; shere at to 1 to 1

UN PERSONAL CIPANLINESS, - 4 word to the laborer; on religion and respect in real on thenters, in their side, etc.; out fore, coultaship and marriage; the laws of home eliquette sie a mare e to l'al ce; general observations and cleaning chapter.

No. 3.-DIME BOOK OF VERSES.

Comprising Dannes I as and Matter, for Lovers and Passier V. . . . . . . A burn Places, Girl Verses, I realist Loves, and protest for it in a, live a, Mourtage Lyciates, etc. CONTRAIN.

Aburne house to me. Me. MET SANDITIFES.

I THE THE PERSON VA - TO VALUE OF THE PERSON !

I AND AFFECTION.

HOLIDAY VERSES. BIRTHDAY VERSES. FRITAPHS AND MOURNING VERSES.-Fo. a lanes at friques,

THE LOTE, YOLKSET,

Ters I the variety a veriation packet com the live everything part. It a fer all the me. It were the thousand that a sufficient and used like a dictionary.

No. 4.-DIME BOOK OF DREAMS.

The rithmans and highertery with a rimb ste morning of the said to the lad from the most a cros ted on , res | r .. e | 1 . e e'es. CONTENTS.

ALL LALLE DA

LA IN MY AND LUIS VAL. John S. Little and chara es with the cases at a present about them by the root one zent entare . on, and marratives of the extra era are to d' ont of them

BET HEADREAVOR LAKEVAR - Y INLE " AR S Y SWA OR the subject g v mg & rational APPRELIES O' . NO PROSORNOS . W HE RELESTANT STE

ed a pres' MER CATHAR VS ROWS STREET, MOVY

- Paver og the supernatural nature of dreams priste o tierrest to prof complete interprets i'r. arveres prepared, extra, ng the wave A c. of cl 0 . . 45 %.

It is a vectore for a of payment even to the general reader, being, in that respect to the thing like Mrs Crows's " Night wheel ha ture " and Chapers I have tower a " Fuetre as on the hivenener of Amesner Wor.s."

No. 5 .- DIME FORTURE-TELLER.

COMPRISING THE ART OF FORTUNE-TRULING, ROW TO READ CHARACTER, BYC.

CORTUNE-TELLING BY CARDS .- Dealing DY NEANS OF CARALISTIC CALCULA the Cards by Threes, Dealing the Cards by Seve s, Deal my two Cards by I freeze, The FAI MINITEY, OR THILING FORTUNES HT Incuts no Carle, Two Italian Metast, Pre HEELINGS II Trib HAND. Consulting the Cards, To Know if you w. . A TEA (St ) FFFF ( ) ? salting the Cards.

ment, Past and Future, Another Method of Felill NL IIIING ETTIL GROUNTS IN

tiet y ur Wah, The Eng. on Method of Con HOW TO EFAD You' It FORTUNE BY THE WHITE OF AN EGG

FIOW TO TELL A PERSON'S CHARACTER, DREAMS AND THEIR INTERPRETATION

No. 6.-DIME LADIES' LETTER-WRITER.

Giving the various forms of Letters of School Pays, Love and Friends, ; of Scelety, etc.

HOW TO WRITE AND HOW NOT TO WRITING HER THIS HILLIS. WRITE.

HOW TO PUNCTUATE, CAPITALIZE, Erc.

LETTERS OF CHILDHOOD. LECTERS OF SCHOOL DAYS.

HETERSOF FRENCHIP.

LETTERS OF COURTSHAP AND LOVE.

LLITERS OF SOCIETY: INVITATIONS, IN-

Thorn Clions, Fre. LITTERS OF SYMPATHY.

LLITERS OF LUSINESS.

fills how think, PROFILES IN MICHARITA

WORLD ALTER IN THE TENTER INTIA M. AND STREET, NO.

INTERNATION OF THE BOT COMMON APPRICATION NACES AND CO.

INTENDED OF ATAMERICAN.

STANISH WOLLAND F. LAND. HALIAN WOLLD AND I HAVE

No. 7.-DIME LOVERS' CASKET.

A Treatise and Guide to Friendship, I. ve. Cortet par i Marriage. Emirac ng also a complete Fronal Pat mary, etc.

CONTENTS.

FRIENTSHIP.-Its Personality, Between Man' and Wough, Class Continuent Proper, Let ters, A Vi athing, Executent Adv ce, A Price 1c, rt, A., w to Improper lationacy, Normal to Young Men, S mething to Avent, Camerantries, Gitts, Boware of Love, Correspondence.

Little -- Ine Dawn of Lave, Lave's Secretives ment, that terres, The First Consciousness of Lore A Make Way, A Water to Way, I to worthy Objects of Love by Woman, Unwerthy Objects of Man's Luve, How to Avoid Matanes.

Cot libilit - The Door Ajar, Disengaged, Fugaged: at want age is it proper, Er ragement 1 to be pretracted, The Winning Line, The Prepared, Asking Papa, The Rights of a Pa-An I have get to

MARRIAGE. - Ine Proper T. be, Various forms of Marriage. The Thomson, Presents Ivequets. I a ir lest a s. I . a se toge en an en. Telre, Tell the the steel A tur the Ceres The Ve and Steam was, "Carus" of "No Carus, N is a " caratura 1-11.

ATTER MARRIAGE - Server to the In cu, I were try less Life line . a Tala

w: The language

MISCILLANZULE - Language of the Fand here of large go of the late large of to tume, I are guare of Fager : go We ag Attornation, val. The Paper Wed. Wasters West of The me created Medicy, I see Wes go . res West DE. Golden Wedding.

re t, Engaged, Proposal Lapacted, Steaking of Till Labor Date of Fig. 12 w to Lac the best with The best to the I. we'd. The V carriers. II-beller - al.

No. S .- DIME BALL-ROOM COMPANION.

4.4 Guille to Pancing. Giving Billes of Fit of etc. Hints on In rate Fartes. Thirts for in Ball to a, etc.

CONTENTS,

FINITETE Arrangements, Private Parties ' SULARY I AND FOR - F and Orace in Finish free merts, Laguer T jets, Gentle etcs , trace Time fatomera I' MENTELLONCERTS. ~ ( ) ( ) ( ) ( ) ( ) ( ) OF THE PRINCING BYLCIAL RULES OF CONDUCT.

Care Tre Nee The Tire Is need The (no. with the form the same to be harm payment enter there is for ele-

Water of the state Marie To a series of the series of Redown, Pr un hau was namere un Lan an Folks, The Varecy and

These books are for sale by all newsdealers, or will be sell, pestpaid, to any neutros, on paceupt of perice, TER CHARLE BACK, by

BEABLE AND ADAMS, Publishers, 36 William Street, New York,

THE ILLUMINATED

DIME POCKET NOVELS,

PUBLISHED SEMI-MONTHLY.

Comprising the best works only of the most popular living writers in the field a American Itomance. Each issue a complete novel, with illuminated cover, rivalist in effect the popular caroms, yet sold at the standard price, Tan Cents.

- Hawkeye Harry. By Oil Coomes. Dead Shot, . . Leet W. A letter The Boy Miners, B. Eiwint S. Long Blue Dick, 1 ct opt. Mysme Re f. Nut Wolfe. By Mrs. M. V. Victor. -The White Trucker. Edward S. Ellia. The Outlaw's Wife. Mrs Ann Shepton. The Tull Trapper, is Alast W. A. .. Lightning Ju. . Cart. Ales. 19 The Island Pirate, beat, Marie E The Boy Ranger By Od Comes Bess, the Trapper, B. F. S. F. The French Spy. B. W J fter day Long Shot. b. Cut Costen. the Gunnaker, in less L. Bewer, Read Hand, re V to Part. Ren, the Trupper. B lew W. Coron, Wild Eaven. P. F. Comes. The Specter Chief. By Son, a Ready. The B'ar-Killer. By Capt. Comstock. -Wild Nat. By Wm. R. Evster. 23 Indian Jo. P. Lew W. Comm. 2: Old Kent, the Ranger. Brands b 21 The One-Fred Trupper. Cot C. Codhold, the sp. 1 \ C to the Black Ship. L. Jone S. Warrar 27 -Single Eye. B. Warren St. John. 24 Ladian Jim. & There's I'm. 29 The Scouts Et Married St. J. C. So imple live, by W J Harton El The Wastle Campe, Friends F' . The colden Burpoon. B. L. S. C. A. the s I her Semily Kilmer, h. I. .. t. Ned H. a.t. c. St total Lands. In S. W. Commer 35 Rainholt, Ranger, Dy Col Cont. 56 The Roy Pioncer. By Elward S. F ..

37 Carson, the Guide. Pv J. H. Barniely b. 38 The Heart later, by Harry Institute. 39 Wetzel, the Scout. by Bayota lakeap. 10 The Huge Hunter, Beld. S. F. a. 41 Wild Nat. the Trapper. Paul Prescrit. 42 Lynx-cap. I. Pallices. The White Outlaw, P. Harry H zard. The Dog Traffer. By Frederick Deves 45 The Lik king. by Capt. Chas, Heward. 46 Adrian, the Pilot. It (of P light ans. 47 The Man-hunter. La Mare C. Rolle The Phantem Trucker, I. F. Dewey 49 Weecasta Bill, ly bad tobe. 50 The Wolf Queen, By Charas Heward. 51 Tom Bawk, the Trailer. 52 The Wad Chief, In Char. Hward. 53-The Black Wolf. By Fdwin E. Ewing 51-Arkanaga Jack. By Harry Hazard. 55 - Black beard, By Paul Bilbs. 56-The River Rifler, By Biller Muller. 57-Hunter Ham, Py J. Figur Hift, 58- Cloudwood. Pr J. M. Merrill. 59 The Texas Hawks, by Jos E. Beger, Jr. 60 Mercilean Mart. by Copt Class Heward. 61 - Wad Anthony's Scouts, by F. Roman. 62 The Luckless Trapper. Win. R. Eyster. The Florida Scout. Jos. F Barger, Jr. The Island Trapper, Class Howard 65 Wolf Cup. Is Cot Class Heward, 66 Ruttling Dick. in florey Bazard. 67 Sharp-Lyc. By Major Max Martine. 68 Iron-Hand, T. Freder J. Forms, 69 The Yellow Hunter, By Charling 70 The Phantom Rider, Ev Marc C. Lo. e. Delaware Tom, by Harry Fiszard. 72-billver Rifle. By Capt. Chas. Howard.

To following will be issued in the order and on the dates indicated:

73 -The Skeleton Scout, or, the Border Block. By Major Lewis W. Car-

71-Little Rifle, er, the Young Fur Hunters. By Capt. "Bruin" Adams, Ready April 24th.

The Wood Witch, or, the Squater's Secret. By Edwin Emerson, Ready May 8th.

76-Old Ruff, the Trapper, or the Young Fur Hunters of Columbia. By Capt. "Bruin" Adams. Ready March 22d.

77-The Searlet Shoulders, er, the Miner Rangers. By Harry Hazard. Ready June 5th,

The Border Rilleman, or, the Ferest Pictel. By Major Lewis W. Carson. Ready June 19th.

79-Outlaw Jack, or, the Muntain Dev.l. By Harry Hazard. Ready

O-Tiger-Tall, the Seminole, or, the Black Durf. By Ralf Ringwood.

the later of the Property of the second of t

Addes. BEADLE AND ADAMS, Publishers, 98 William Street, New York,

Beadle's New Dine Novels.

PUBLISHED SEMI-MONTHLY.

In this new series of the popular favorites, "the Incomparable Dime Novels," are presented only the best works of the most entertaining American writers, given in the usual size and form, but with illuminated covers. Lovers of rominge of American life, character and history will find in these novels an unending source of delight. The following are already issued:

322-Old Grizzly. By Capt. Adams. 323 - Dashing Dragoons, By C. D. Clark 324-Will-o'-the-Wisp. By F. Dewey. 325-Dashing Dick. By Oll Coomes. 326-Old Crossfire. By Capt. Howard. 327-Ben Bramble. By H. J. Thomas. 328-Brigand Captain, A. W. Aiken. 329-0ld Strategy. By Oll Coomes. 330-Gray Hair, Chief. W. J. Hamilton 331-Prairie Tigers, Jos. E. Badger, Jr. 332-Rival Hunters. By E. S. Ellis. 333-Texan Scout. By Harry Hazard. 334-Zebra Zack. By W. J. Hamilton 335 - Masked Messenger, H. Johnstone 336-Morgan, the Pirate. J. S. Warner 337-The Boy Spy. By Olf Coomes. 338-Table, the Trailer, Seelin Robins 339 - The Boy Chief. By Oll Coomes. 340-Tim, the Trailer. C. D. Clark. 341-Red Ax, the Giant Paul B.bbs. 342-Stella, the Spy. By N. C. Iron. · 343-White Avenger. L. W. Carson. 344-The Indian King, N. W Busteed. 345-The Long Trail. By E. S. Ellis. 346-Kirk, the Guide, Mrs. Stephens. 347-The Phantom Trail. E. S. Ellis 377-Winona, W. J. Hamilton. 348 - The Apache Guide, By E S. Ellis 378-Silent Shot. By Oll Coomes.

352-On the Trail. By E. S. Ellis. 353-The Specter Spy. Lew W. Carson. 354-Old Bald-head. By Oll Coomes. 355-Red Knife, Chief. E. Emerson. 356-Sib Cone, Trapper. Ned Builline 357 - The Bear-Hunter, Harry Hazard 358-Bashful Bill, Spy. L. W. Carren. 359-The White Chief. Joe. Henderson 360-Cortina, Scourge, John Binerald. 361-The Squaw Spy. By Paul Bible 362-Scout of '76. Herrick Johnstone. 363-Spanish Jack. By Fred'k Dewey. 364-Masked Spy. Prentiss Ingraham. 365-Kirke, Renegade. J. Herderen. 366-Dingle, the Outlaw. E. Emer-un 367-The Green Ranger. E. Emer-n. 368-Montbars, Scourge. Paul B. bbs. 369-Metamora. By Albert W. Aiken. 370-Thornpath, Trailer. (). 371-Foul-weather Jack. R. Sariask. 372-The Black Rider. J. E. Badger. 373-The Helpless Hand. Marie Rid ! 374-The Lake Bangers, W.J. Hamilton 375-Alone on the Plains. Ed. Willett. 376-Phantom Horseman, E. S. Ellis. 349-The Mad Miner. Harry Hazard. 379-The Phantom Ship. R. Start ock. 350-Keen-eye, Ranger. Lewis Swift. 380-The Red Rider. Jas. L. Bowen.

The following will be issued in the order and on the dates indicated:

383-The Specter Skipper; or, The Sunken Will. By Roger Starback. Realy

351-Blue Belt, Guide, J. L. Bowen, 381-Grizzly-Hunters, F. Whittaker.

382-The Mad Ranger, By Jos. E. Badger, Jr.

384 - The Med Coyote; or, Lupah, the Flower of the Prairie. By Albert W. Alken. Ready

385-The Hunchback; or, The Cave Castle, By W. J. Hamilton. Ready

386-The Black Wizard. A Tale of the Fatal Circle of Invisible Fire. By Fredcrick Whittaker. Ready

387-The Mad Horseman: or, The Prairie Tournament. By Edwin Emerson. Ready

388-The Privateer's Bride; or, The Channel Scud. By J. R. Callwell. Rady June 12th.

BEADLE'S DIME Novels are always in print and for sale by all news have a will be went, jast-pata, to any address; so the numbers, ten calls: s.x m. .... . (1) Nos.) $1.25; one year (26 Nos.) $2.50. Address, BEADLE AND ADAMS, Publishers 98 William St. W. Y.

一年 一年 一年十二年

E en

Fac.

0

A STATE OF THE PARTY OF THE PAR

Francisco Contractor C

STANDARD DIME DIALOGUES

For School Exhibitions and Home Entertainments.

Nos. I to 21 inclusive. 15 to 25 Popular Dialogues and Dramae in each book. Each volume 104 12me pages, sent post-paid, on receipt of price, ten cents.

Beadle & Adams, Publishers, 98 William St., N. Y.

These volumes have been prepared with especial reference to their availability for Exhibitions, elog adapted to schools and parlors with or without the furniture of a stage, and suited to SCHOL as AND YOUNG PEOPLE of every ege, both male and female. It is fair to assume that no hooks in the market, at any price, contain so many useful and available dislogues and dramas tion, homor and sentiment.

DIME DIALOGUES, NO. 1.

For nine young ladies. Englishman. For tores boys, Jornation. For male and female. shion. For two ladies. Ple Reheareal. For six boys. Which will you Choose! For two boys. Tta Queen of May. For two little girls. The Tee Farty. For four ladies-Phree Scenes in Wedded Life. Male and female. Mrs. Sniffles' Confession. For male and female. The Mission of the Spirits. Five young ladies.

Hobnobbing. For five speakers. The Secret of Success. For three speakers, Young America. Three males on two females. Josephine's Destiny. Four females, one male. The Folly of the Duel. For three male speakers. Dogmatism. For three male speakers, The Ignorant Confounded. For two boys The Fast Young Man. For two males. The Year's Reckoning. 12 females and 1 mala The Village with One Gentleman. For eight males and one male.

DIME DIALOGUES, NO. 2.

The Gambas of Liberty. I males and I female. Cinderella; or, The Little Glass Slipper. Doing Good and Saying Bad. Several characters. A Sensation at Last. For two males. The Golden Rule. Two males and two females. The Greenhorn. For two males, The Gift of the Fairy Queen. Several females. Taken is and Done Fer. For two characters. The Country Aunt's Visit to the City. For sev- The Little Phil sophers. For two little girls. eral characters.

The Two Romans. For two males. frying the Characters. For three maiss. The Happy Family. For several 'animala,' The Sainbow, For several characters.

How to Write 'Popular' Stories. Two makes The New and the Old. For two malea The Three Men of Science. For four males. The Old Lady's Will. For four males, How to Find an Heir. For five males, The Virtues. For six young ladies. A Connubial Eclogue. The Public meeting. Five males and one females The English Traveler. For two males.

DIME DIALOGUES, NO. 3.

Fig. May Queen. For an entire school. Cross Reform Convention. For ten females. Lesolug Barl Company. A Fares. For five males. The Two Romans. For two males. Consting Under Difficulties. 2 males, 1 female. The Same. Second scene. For two males. Essaning the Draft. For numerous males.

The Genteal Conk. For two males. Masterplece. For two males and two females. National Representatives. A Burlesque. 4 males. Showing the White Feather. 4 males, 1 females. The Battle Call. A Recitative. For one mula,

The frost Fing. For ten or more persons. Starting in Life. Three males and two females. A Scene from " Paul Pry." For four males. Faith, Hope and Charity. For three little girls. The Charms. For three males and one female, Dar y sed Joan. For two males and one female. Bee, Clock and Broom. For three little girls, The May. A Floral Fancy. For six little girls. The Right Way. A Collegey. For two boys. The Englanted Princes. 2 males several females What the Ledger Says. For two males. mingy. A Discussion. For twenty males. The Letter. For two males.

DIME DIALOGUES, NO. 4. (The Stubb'etown Volunteer. 2 males, 1 few ales The Crimes of Dress. A Colleger. Forth. a Bestle Client. Forsaveral males, one female The Reward of Benevolence. For four male, DIME DIALDGUES, NO. 5.

A Pros Guerres. For school or parlor. Mantha A "Three Persons" " Fa ce. salled the Curtain. For males and females. The Eta Pi Society. Five boys and a teaches. Erapleation Day. For several female characters. Prading in "Trapa." For several males. The Pencel Boys Tribunal. For tan boys. A Le me Tongue. Several males and females. How Not to Get an Answer. For two females. DIME DIALOGUES, NO. 6.

Putting on Airs. A Colloquy. For two seles The Straight Mark. For several boys. Two ideas of Life. A Colloquy. For tea girls Extract from Marine Fallero. Ma-try-Money. An Acting Charade. The Six Virtues. For six young ladies. The Frishman at Home. For two males. Fashionable Requirements. For three girls. A Bary of Ps (Eyes). For eight or less little guris

The Post under Difficulties. For five malus, B I to not Gold that Glutters. Male and females. Santa Claus. For a number of boystra Generous Jew. For six males. counting. For three males and one ismale.

The Way They Kept a Secret. Male and females. | The Two Counselors. For three males. The Votaries of Folly. For a number of females, Aunt Betsy's Beaux. Four females and two males 77 y cam's Rights. Seven females and two makes. The Libel Suit. For two females and one make Christmas Fairles. For several little girls. The Tures Rings, For two males.

DIME DIALECT SPEAKER, No. 23.

Suc's wat's de matter, [All about a bee, The Miss salppi miracle, Scandal, Fon to tide cooms in, O we laims you Mary ha! To pesser vay, nan's rights, The home rulers, how Tobias so to speak, Liev "apakes," Herskish Dawson on a parody, Mothers in-law. He didn't sell the farm. Bill Underwood, pilot, I've true story of Frank Old Granley, lin's Lite. I would I were a boy tion, WESTER ! & pathetta story,

A dark side view, On learning German, fat C Flaherty on wo- Mary's shmall vite lamb A healthy discourse, Old Mrs. Grimes, Mars and cats, The pill peddler's ora- Our candidate's views, Widder Green's words, Latest Chinese outrage, My neighbor's dogs, The manifest destiny of Condensed Mythelogy the Irishman, Pictus, Peggy McCann, The Nareides, Sprays from Josh Bil ! Legends of Attica, The stove-pipe tragedy De circumstances ob de A deketer's drubbles, gitiwation, The coming man Dar's nuffin new under The illigant about st de sun, Muldoon's, A Negro religious poem, That little baby That violin, the corper, Pienle delights, A genewine infe' 4 An Invitation Dundreary's wisdom, bird of liberty, last Plain language by truth- The crow, Out west ful Jane,

DIME DIALOGUES No. 26.

Mountains and mole-hills. Six ladies and several Practice what you preach. Four ladies. anectators. A test that did not full. Six bovs. Two ways of seeing things. Two little girls. Don't count your chickens before they are Grub. Two males.

batched. Four ladles and a boy. Ali is fair in love and war. I ladies, I gentlemen. Eurbodied sunshine. Three young ladies. How uncle Josh got rid of the legacy. Two males, How Jim Peters died. Two males. with several transformations.

FLOT comins. Three ladies and two gentlemen. |The lesson of mercy. Two very small girls. Politician. Numerous characters. The canvasting agent. Two males and two females. A slight scare. Three females and one mala.

The shore books are sold by Newsdealers everywhere, or will be sent, post-paid, it may Midress, as wormt of price, 10 cents with.

Markette and the second of the

the same of the sa

THE RESERVE OF THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN TWO IS NOT THE OWNERS OF THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN TWO IS NOT THE OWNER.

BEASLE - DAMS, Publishers, 98 William St., N. T.

STANDARD BOOKS OF GAMES AND PASTIMES.

BEADLE AND ADAMS, PUBLISHERS, NEW YORK.

DIME BASE-BALL PLAYER FOR 1880.

Containing the Individual Club Records of the International and League Alliance Clubs of 1879, including all the Single Figure Games they played; also the League and International Championship Records of 1879; together with the Model Contests of the Season, both in the Amateur and Professional Arena also special chapters on playing the several positions, on scoring, etc. Edited By Henry Chadwick.

HAND-BOOK OF CROQUET.

A Complete Guide to the Principles and Practice of the Game. This popular pastime has, during the few years of its existence, rapidly outgrown the first vague and imperfect rules and regulations of its inventor; and, as almost every house a which it is played adopts a different code of laws, it becomes a difficult matter for a stranger to assimilate his play to that of other people. It is, therefore, highly desirable that one uniform system should be generally adopted, and hence the object of this work is to establish a recognized method of playing the game.

DIME BOOK OF 100 GAMES.

Out-door and in-door SUMMER GAMES for Tourists and Families in the Country, Picnics, etc., comprising 100 Games, Forfeits and Conundrams for Childhood and Youth, Single and Married, Grave and Gay. A Pocket Hand-book for the Summer Season.

CRICKET AND FOOT-BALL.

A desirable Cricketer's Companion, containing complete instructions in the elements of Bowling, Batting and Fielding; also the Revised Laws of the Game; Remarks on the Duties of Umpires; the Mary-le Bone Cricket Club Rules and Regulations; Bets, etc. By Henry Chadwick.

HAND-BOOK OF PEDESTRIANISM.

Giving the Rules for Training and Practice in Walking, Running, Leaping Vaulting, etc. Edited by Henry Chadwick.

YACHTING AND ROWING.

This volume will be found very complete as a guide to the conduct of watercraft and full of interesting information alike to the amateur and the novice. The chapter referring to the great rowing-match of the Oxford and Cambridge clubs on the Phames, will be found particularly interesting.

RIDING AND DRIVING.

A sure guide to correct Horsemanship, with complete directions for the road and field; and a specific section of directions and information for female equestrians. Drawn largely from "Stonehenge's" fine manual, this volume will be found all that can be desired by those seeking to know all about the horse, and his management in harness and under the saddle.

GUIDE TO SWIMMING.

Comprising Advisory Instructions; Rules upon Entering the Water; General Directions for Swimming; Diving: How to Come to the Surface; Swimming on the Back; How to Swim in times of Danger; Surf-bathing—How to Manage the Waves, the Tides, etc.; a Chapter for the Ladies; a Specimen Female Swimming School; How to Manage Cases of Drowning; Dr. Franklin's Code for Swimmers; etc. Illustrated. By Capt. Philip Peterson.

For sale by all newsdealers; or sent, post-paid, to any address, on receipt of price-TEN CENTS each.

Beadle's New Dime Novels.

PUBLISHED SEMI-MONTHLY.

418 The Warrior Princess. 370 Thornpath, Trailer. 322 Old Grizzly. 323 Dashing Dragoons. 371 Foul-weather Jack. 419 The Blue Band. 824 Will-o'-the Wisp. 372 The Black Rider. 420 The Squaw Chief. 325 Dashing Dick. 373 The Helpless Hand. 421 The Flying Scout. 326 Old Crossfire. 374 The Lake Rangers. 422 Sonora Ben. 875 Alone on the Plains. 327 Ben Bramble. 423 The Sea King. 376 Phantom Horseman. 328 Brigand Captain. 424 Mountain Gid. 329 Old Strategy. 377 Winona. 425 Death-Trailer. 378 Silent Shot. 426 The Crested Serpent. 330 Gray Hair, Chief. 379 The Phantom Ship. 331 Prairie Tigers. 427 Arkansas Kit. 380 The Red Rider. 428 The Corsair Prince. 332 Rival Hunters. 381 Grizzly-Hunters. 429 Ethan Allen's Rifles. 333 Texan Scout. 382 The Mad Ranger. 430 Little Thunderbolt. 834 Zebra Zack. 383 The Specter Skipper. 431 The Falcon Rover. 335 Masked Messenger. 336 Morgan, the Pirate. 384 The Red Coyote. 432 Honest Hand. 337 The Boy Spy. 385 The Hunchback. 433 The Stone Chief. 338 Table, the Trailer. 386 The Black Wizard. 434 The Gold Demon. 387 The Mad Horseman. 435 Eutawan, the Slayer. 339 The Boy Chief. 340 Tim, the Trailer. 388 Privateer's Bride. 436 The Masked Guide. 437 The Conspirators. 389 Jaguar Queen. 341 Red Ax, the Giant. 390 Shadow Jack. 438 Swiftwing, the Squaw. 342 Stella, the Spy. 439 Caribou Zip. 391 Eagle Plume. 843 White Avenger, 440 The Privateer. 392 Ocean Outlaw. 844 The Indian King. 893 Red Slayer. 441 The Black Spy. 845 The Long Trail. 394 The Phantom Foe. 346 Kirk, the Guide. 442 The Doomed Hunter. 347 The Phantom Trail. 395 Blue Anchor. 443 Barden, the Ranger. 896 Red-Skin's Pledge. 348 The Apache Guide. 444 The Gray Scalp. 39. Quadroon Spy. 349 The Mad Miner. 445 The Peddler Spy. 898 Black Rover. 446 The White Cance. 350 Keen-eye, the Ranger. 399 Red Belt. 447 Eph Peters. 351 Blue Belt, the Guide. 400 The Two Trails. 448 The Two Hunters. 352 On the Trail. 449 The Traitor Spy. 401 The Ice-Fiend. 353 The Specter Spy. 450 The Gray Hunter. 402 The Red Prince. 354 Old Bald-head. 355 Red Knife, the Chief. 403 The First Trail. 451 Little Moccasin. 356 Sib Cone, Trapper. 452 The White Hermit. 404 Sheet-Anchor Tom. 357 The Bear-Hunter. 453 The Island Bride. 405 Old Avoirdupois. 406 White Gladiator. 358 Bashful Bill, the Spy. 454 The Forest Princess. 407 Blue Clipper. 359 The White Chief. 455 The Trail Hunters. 456 Backwoods Banditti, 408 Red Dan. 360 Cortina, the Scourge. 409 The Fire-Eater. 361 The Squaw Spy. 457 Ruby Roland, Girl Spy. 362 Scout of '76. 410 Blackhawk. 458 Laughing Eyes. 459 The Mohegan Maiden. 363 Spanish Jack. 411 The Lost Ship. 364 Masked Spy. 460 The Quaker Scout. 412 Black Arrow. 365 Kirke, the Renegade. 413 White Serpent. 461 Sumter's Scouts. 266 Dingle, the Outlaw, 414 The Lost Captain. 462 The Five Champions. 367 The Green Ranger. 463 The Two Guards. 415 The Twin Trailers, 368 Montbars, Scourge. 416 Death's Head Ranger. 464 Quindaro. 417 Captain of Captains. 359 Metamora. 465 Rob Ruskin. The following will be issued in the order and on the dates indicated:

466—The Rival Rovers. By Roger Starbuck. Ready 467—Ned Starling. By J. Stanley Henderson. Ready 468—Single Hand. By W. J. Hamilton. Ready 469—Tippy, the Texan. By George Gleason. Ready 470—The Young Mustanger. By Will Dexter. Ready 471—The Hunted Life. By Edward Willett. Ready 472—The Buffalo Trapper. Chas. E. Lasalle Ready

473-Old Zip. By "Bruin" Adams. Ready 474-Foghorn Phil. By Oll Coomes. Ready

475-Mossfoot, the Brave. By W. J. Hamilton. Ready

476-Snow-Bird, the Trapper's Child. By Edward Willett. Ready Oct. 26th.

BEADLE'S DIME Novels are always in print and for sale by all newsdealers; or will be sent, post-paid, to any address; single numbers, ten cents; six months (13 Nos.) $1.25; one year (26 Nos.) $2.50. Address, BEADLE AND ADAMS, Publishers, 98 William St., N. Y.